FRANKFURT, Germany (R) — Freed American hostage Jesse Turner left Germany for the United States Friday, four days after being freed by kidnappers who had held him in Lebanon for nearly five years. Mr. Turner, 44, flew from Frankfurt on a civil airliner bound for Chicago and Denver. He was accompanied by his Lebanese wife Badr and four-year-old daughter Joanne, who was born shortly after he was seized in January 1987. Mr. Turner's stay at a U.S. military hospital in Wiesbaden was shorter than that of other American hostages freed in Lebanon in recent years. Officials at the hospital said they had been surprised at his sudden decision to leave. It was not clear whether his early departure and use of a civilian rather than government plane were connected with a row between his stepfather and the hospital. His stepfather, Eugene Ronneburg, was barred from the hospital Thursday for videotaping the family's reunion and passing the tape to a television network, which broadcast it in the United States. Mr. Ronneburg said on Friday he felt the U.S. reprimand had been an injustice.

Arabiyat returns from Tehran

AMMAN (Petra) — Lower House of Parliament Speaker Abdul Latif Arabiyat returned to Amman Friday after taking part in an Iranian-sponsored conference on Palestine which concluded in Tehran Tuesday. Dr. Arabiyat was accompanied by a Jordanian parliamentary delegation which comprised deputies Abdul Majid Shreideh and Mohammad Al Haj. The conference, in which ministers and parliamentarians from 60 countries participated, called for forming a joint force named Al Quds (Jerusalem) army to liberate all Palestine. Dr. Arabiyat said, in a statement at the airport that the conference recommended collecting donations to support the steadfastness of the Palestinian people. The Arab Parliamentary Union, he said, held a meeting on the sidelines of the conference to unify their stands. "Heads of the Islamic parliamentary delegation urged participants in the conference to support Iraq and lift the embargo imposed on it since Aug. 1990," he said.

Bush: U.S. will be an active partner in Madrid

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush said Friday that the United States will be a "committed and active partner" in the Middle East peace conference that opens next week.

Mr. Bush also said his talks with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev before the conference will cover any subject the Soviet leader wants to bring up.

The U.S. president characterized the Madrid talks as a first step towards peace in a troubled part of the world.

"The United States cannot make peace, only the parties themselves can do that," the president told a news conference at the White House.

The president said he would meet privately with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir while in Madrid for the ceremonial opening of the peace conference.

The meeting expands Mr. Bush's role beyond a ceremonial opening speech.

The private session with Mr. Gorbachev, who is attending as co-host, will be "open-ended" covering subjects such as nuclear weapons and the Soviet economy — "anything that he's interested in," Mr. Bush said.

It will be their first meeting since the collapse of a hardline communist coup against Mr. Gorbachev in August, and since the two leaders announced steps to cut their nuclear arsenals.

Mr. Bush said he would use the occasion to present another detailed arms initiative.

Mr. Bush turned aside questions on the specifics of the peace talks.

But he said, "we are trying to be a catalyst." His comments suggested he may have private suggestions for Mr. Shamir about shaping a settlement with the Arabs.

Mr. Bush commended the statesmanship of all countries that agreed to attend the peace conference, and said "sitting down together is the beginning of understanding."

Mr. Bush stressed the "historic nature" of the conference, the first in the region since a failed attempt in 1973. He noted that the Middle East has been "characterized by dangerous and tragic conflicts for decades."

Even as he expressed his hopes for the outcome of the Madrid talks, Mr. Bush brushed aside a question about whether progress was possible without Israel giving up territory it took in 1967.

Jordan finalises delegation; Palestinian team arrives

Diplomats and experts expected to dominate Jordan's negotiation team

By Neimeen Murad
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The government was completing work last night on the names of the Jordanian side to the joint Palestinian-Jordanian delegation, and a final list is expected to be announced today. Career diplomats and technical experts are expected to dominate the Jordanian team, which will meet today with their Palestinian counterparts to get to know each other and coordinate strategy on the historic Middle East conference that opens in Madrid on Wednesday.

Informal sources confirmed the names of 12 of the Jordanian delegates but said that the list was not yet finalised by Friday evening. The sources also confirmed that Foreign Minister Kamel Abu Jaber will head the joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation and that Dr. Abdul Salam Al Majali, a former minister and advisor to His Majesty the King, will head the Jordanian team to bilateral talks with the Israelis.

The 12 confirmed delegates are: Ambassador Awaad Khalidi (France), Ambassador Mohammed Udwan (the Soviet Union), Ambassador Talal Sataan Al Hassan (Belgium) and the European Community, Ambassador-designate Foad Ayyoub (the United Kingdom), Armed Forces General Abdul Hafez Mar'ee, Vice-President of the University of Jordan Adnan Al Bakht, Foreign Ministry official and advisor to His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan Aoun Khassawneh, Secretary General of the Ministry of Municipalities and former Jordan Valley Authority Director-General Mohammad Bani Hami, former Governor of Jerusalem Anwar Al Khatib and Harvard University professor Walid Al Khalidi, who is also an international expert on Palestinian affairs.

The inclusion of Mr. Khatib and Prof. Khalidi is seen as an effort to fulfill the criteria set by the Palestine National Council (PNC) last month in which the Palestinian parliament-in-exile demanded that Palestinians from Jerusalem and in the diaspora be represented in the delegation.

The delegation, described by officials as a "team of government officials and experts," will maintain contact with Prime Minister Taher Masri as a reference point with the cabinet, which is constitutionally required to approve the agreements resulting from negotiations.

The cabinet had met Thursday to approve an initial list of delegates but the final decision was postponed until today when the cabinet is expected to meet again and approve the final list of names.

The cabinet, a coalition of several distinct groups espousing different ideologies and political leanings and technocrats, has endorsed Jordanian participation in the conference, but individual ministers are emphasizing that they remain the "reference body" for the delegation on points of development in negotiations. This was one of the key issues discussed during a cabinet session Thursday, sources told the Jordan Times.

Thursday was expanded from seven to 14 people who include representatives from refugee camps and pro-PLO factions.

Hanan Ashrawi from the steering committee, who could not attend direct negotiations because she has an identity card from Jerusalem, told reporters upon arrival at the Plaza Hotel lobby that the talks with Jordanian officials and the Palestinian delegation, whose names had not yet been announced, would focus on further coordination before the U.S.-Soviet sponsored Madrid conference starts on Wednesday.

"The talks will be to coordinate and work out the logistics and procedural issues," said Dr. Ashrawi, a professor of English literature at Bir Zeit University near Ramallah. Mr. Hussein, said that the schedule of meetings with the Jordanian side was not yet known but a series of

Masri meets PLO and occupied territories teams; coordination going well

By Lamis K. Andoni
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Prime Minister Taher Masri met on Friday with Senior Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) officials and the Palestinian side of the joint Jordanian-Palestinian delegation to coordinate stands prior to the Madrid Middle East peace conference this week.

The joint delegation was scheduled to start a two-day meeting to work out a mechanism for the work of the delegation at Madrid.

Since the PLO approved the Palestinian delegation last week Jordanian-Palestinian coordination has been conducted on two interrelated and overlapping levels: Coordination between the PLO and Jordan, which outlines the framework of this coordination; and talks between Jordanian officials and members of the Palestinian delegation from the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Both Jordan and the PLO have so far been cautious not to provide Israel, which says it refuses to talk with personalities linked with the PLO, with the opportunity to torpedo the process.

The resulting process is that no formal meetings between PLO officials and the Palestinian delegates are confirmed.

The PLO delegation, headed by PLO Foreign Minister Farouk Qadumi, and the Palestinian team which crossed the bridge on Friday, are staying at the Plaza Hotel.

Mr. Masri went to the Plaza Friday evening and met with both the PLO delegation led by Mr. Qadumi and the Palestinian negotiating

Egypt freezes visa rule

AMMAN (J.T.) — Information Minister Mahmoud Al Sherif said Friday that the Egyptian authorities from a decision calling for Jordanians to obtain visas before entering Egyptian territory.

In a statement given to the Jordan News Agency, Petra, Mr. Sherif said the visa requirement for Jordanians would be frozen until the Egyptian authorities annul the decision. He said Foreign Minister Kamel Abu Jaber was informed by his Egyptian counterpart Friday in a telephone conversation of Cairo's decision.

The two foreign ministers had the issue under discussion Thursday in Damascus at a meeting of the foreign ministers of Jordan, Egypt, Palestine, Lebanon and Syria. Press reports published Friday said Jordanians should obtain a visa before visiting Egypt. The reports quoted a senior Egyptian official at Cairo airport as saying that he had orders to turn back any Jordanian without a visa.

Israel names hardline team, threatens boycott

TEL AVIV (Agencies) — Israel named a hardline team on Friday to Middle East peace talks and threatened to walk out if a Palestinian who declared his negotiating team represented the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) attended.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who pushed aside his Foreign Minister David Levy to take charge of the team, picked a 14-member team dominated by hawks.

It did not include Mr. Levy whose aides say will now challenge Mr. Shamir for the Likud party leadership.

Yossi Alameir, a Shamir aide, said the prime minister had wanted a member of the opposition Labour Party — Edna Solomon — on the team.

Labour, he said, instead offered Benjamin Ben-Eliezer, a retired general and one-time coordinator of the Israeli-occupied territories.

Mr. Shamir, a vehement opponent of earlier U.S. attempts to end the 43-year-old Arab-Israeli conflict, ditched Mr. Levy Wednesday.

The sub-fuelled rumours of a leadership battle within Likud, but Mr. Shamir's aides have sought to calm speculation of any threat to the 76-year-old prime minister. Mr. Levy has kept silent but his officials and his brother have said he would challenge Mr. Shamir.

Mr. Shamir added fire to the dispute Friday by naming Deputy Foreign Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, a rival of Mr. Levy, as one of the delegates to Madrid. Mr. Netanyahu gained some fame in the United States during the Gulf war as spokesman for Israel.

Also included were such leading lawmakers from Mr. Shamir's Likud bloc as Sarah Doron and Uzi Landau, as well as several career diplomats including Israel's ambassador to the United States, Zalman Shoval.

The list was announced by Mr. Shamir's spokesman, Ehud Gol, who said an advisory committee would be named later.

Two of those named in the prime minister's team, Yossi Ben Aharon, director general of Mr. Shamir's office, and cabinet secretary Elaykim Rubinstein, are expected to draw the toughest jobs.

Mr. Ben Aharon, who many believe is more hardline than Mr. Shamir, is expected to head bilateral talks with Syria.

Mr. Rubinstein is likely to have drawn leadership of bilateral negotiations with the Jordanian-Palestinian team.

The Palestinians are sending a 14-member advisory committee along with the 14 negotiators who will be part of a joint Palestinian-Jordanian delegation.

The other members of the Israeli delegation are:

Damascus meeting agrees on united stand in Madrid

DAMASCUS (Agencies) — Arab leaders have forged a common stance for next week's Middle East peace conference at a meeting of their foreign ministers here.

Syria, Egypt, Jordan, Lebanon and mainstream members of the Palestine Liberation Organisation hammered out a common negotiating position to bring to the Madrid meeting, Saudi Arabia and Morocco, who will attend as observers, backed the decisions by the front-line Arab states bordering Israel.

In the meeting in Damascus, the front-line participants agreed not to reach separate peace accords with Israel, demanded a halt to Jewish settlements in the occupied territories and insisted that Israel negotiate on the status of Jerusalem.

One of the Arab sources in Damascus, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the participants at the meeting differed widely on some points, but after Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's decision to lead the Israeli delegation they felt their best stand would be "total harmony."

The Arab states want a "complete Israeli withdrawal" from the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem, an "immediate freeze" on the construction of Jewish settlements in the occupied territories, and "realisation of the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people" who seek an independent homeland.

Palestinian officials said Friday in Amman the Arab parties to the peace talks agree that secondary issues such as water rights will not be tackled until Israel agrees to discuss withdrawing from the occupied Arab lands.

Multilateral talks between Israel and the Arabs are due to take place on issues including arms control and water rights following the Madrid conference. Bilateral talks are due to begin four days later.

West Bank Palestinian leader Hanan Ashrawi said in Amman that Palestinian officials pledged at the two-day meeting in Damascus not to sign separate bilateral treaties with Israel without progress on the Palestinian problem.

"There will not be any single treaties between any single Arab country and Israel," Dr. Ashrawi told reporters in Amman.

Destruction of Iraqi arms may take until 1993

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Iraq's chemical weapons arsenal is so vast, dangerous and unwieldy that U.N. teams will not be able to finish destroying it until at least 1993, a top U.N. official said.

"The ... munitions that are filled with nerve agents and mustard gas and so on, as you can imagine, those are extremely dangerous to handle," said Rolf Ekeus, head of the U.N. special commission set up to destroy Iraq's chemical arsenal and other mass destruction weapons.

Disposing of the munitions poses "a great risk," Mr. Ekeus said.

A team of about 50 U.N. special commission inspectors is currently surveying the main Iraqi chemical weapons site at the Muthanna military base outside of Baghdad. Their mission is due to end in early November.

The munitions will be destroyed on site at Muthanna, and chemical weapons found elsewhere in Iraq are being transported there.

The inspectors are checking all of the many buildings on the site because Baghdad has consistently understated its weapons programmes in its declarations to the United Nations.

In April, Iraq declared it had about 12,000 chemical bombs, shells and missiles, but inspectors found about 46,000 loaded weapons, along with 79,000 unfilled munitions, over 600 tons of chemical warfare agents and 3,000 tons of precursor chemicals.

"We will work well into 1993 on the destruction of chemicals; that will be a prolonged element," Mr. Ekeus told reporters.

"We have now 125,000 items to take care of, which is an enormous amount."

Iraq declared after the Gulf war that it had 52 Scud or modified Scud missiles, and 30 chemical weapon warheads for them.

Arafat will stay out of talks, will accept outcome

NEW YORK (Agencies) — Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Chairman Yasser Arafat said Friday that the Palestinian delegation to the Mideast talks would negotiate without his help, and he promised to abide by the conference's outcome.

"Anything these Palestinian leaders in this conference will accept, I will accept," he said in a television interview.

Mr. Arafat appeared on a large television screen in a studio as he spoke by satellite from Tunis, Tunisia, to interviewers Phil Donahue and Vladimir Pozner, a Soviet political commentator. Several callers posed questions, but Mr. Arafat appeared to have difficulty hearing much of what was said in the studio.

The Palestinians are going to the conference in a joint delegation with Jordan, and will be advised by a 14-member committee. The talks are scheduled to start Wednesday in Madrid, Spain.

A major issue of conflict in convening the talks was the background of Palestinian negotiators. Israel ruled out any from outside the occupied territories or anyone with strong ties to the PLO.

A sign of the issue's explosiveness came Friday, when Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's spokesman said Israel would consider pulling out of the talks if the delegation included Saeb Erekat, who said in an interview Thursday that his delegation "was chosen by the PLO."

In response to a question from Mr. Donahue whether the Palestinian delegates represented the PLO, Mr. Arafat said yes, but only because "any Palestinian represents the PLO."

"They have declared many times because they are Palestinians, they are leaders in our occupied territories — they will represent the PLO," he said.

He said that principle was part of the PLO's charter.

Mr. Arafat's response showed how he was seeking to maintain a PLO profile in the talks yet not provoke the Israelis enough for them to back out.

Earlier, Mr. Donahue asked the PLO chairman if he would communicate with the delegation during the talks.

"They are not in need of me now," Mr. Arafat said. "They have all the probabilities and capabilities and everything."

In explaining why the Palestinians chose to attend the conference, Mr. Arafat said it was to avoid a split in the peace process and not to give Israel any excuse for avoiding negotiations.

Mr. Arafat was asked if he was optimistic. He said the talks would not be easy. "We are in need of more efforts to achieve

Dughmi's resignation expected to end differences in cabinet over labour policies

By P.V. Vivekanand
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The resignation of Abdul Karim Dughmi as labour minister was accepted Thursday, ending differences in the council of ministers spanning several months over labour policies and other issues concerning government work.

The resignation was not a spur-of-the-moment decision but the culmination of differences in approach among members of the cabinet of Prime Minister Taher Masri and had a lot to do with the basic concept of "Jordanisation" of the Kingdom's workforce, according to informed sources and analysts.

A Royal Decree was issued Thursday accepting Mr. Dughmi's resignation and appointing Qassem Obeidat, minister of state for prime ministry affairs, as acting labour minister. Dr. Obeidat had served as labour minister under Prime Minister Mudar Badran from December 1989 to January 1991.

Reports of Mr. Dughmi's departure from the cabinet emerged Wednesday, when the minister sent word that he had resigned his job effective Oct. 13, but it was not then clear whether his resignation would be accepted by King Hussein, following a recommendation from the prime minister, who was said to have involved in a last-ditch effort to convince the deputy from the northern constituency of Ma'raq to stay.

Prime Minister Masri himself and several cabinet colleagues tried in vain to talk Mr. Dughmi out of resigning, said a cabinet source. "They gave up after Mr. Dughmi refused to budge from his position," added the source, who, like most others who spoke to the Jordan Times on the issue, preferred anonymity.

Accounts of the reasons of the resignation of Mr. Dughmi vary, but a consensus among various sources is that it had little to do with politics related to Jordan's participation in the peace process.

Mr. Dughmi, a lawyer by profession, joined the government as minister of municipal affairs and the environment in December 1989 when Mr. Badran formed his government after the parliamentary elections in November of that year. He was appointed minister of labour in the cabinet reshuffle of January 1991, and retained the portfolio in the Masri cabinet, which was sworn in on June 19, 1991.

According to cabinet sources, Mr. Dughmi had submitted his resignation several times in the past, including during his tenure in the Badran cabinet, after sharp differences arose between him and other ministers over labour policies and other issues involving government policies.

"It was mostly a question of chemistry not mixing," commented a cabinet member. "Mr. Dughmi had his own way of doing things and some of his colleagues did not see eye-to-eye with him, and the differences gradually grew to an irreconcilable rift," said the source. "Mr. Dughmi had submitted his resignation at least six times in the past, but everytime he was dissuaded."

Mr. Dughmi, who lives in

Turks renew raids against Kurds in northern Iraq

ANKARA (Agencies) — Turkish warplanes and helicopters attacked Kurdish guerrilla bases in northern Iraq Friday for the second time this month, the semi-official Anatolia news agency reported.

The bases were suspected to be run by guerrillas of the outlawed Kurdish Labour Party (PKK), a group fighting for independence in southeastern Turkey since 1984. The area is home to about half of Turkey's 12 million Kurds.

"Our forces are hitting and returning. The operation is along the border and a few kilometres inside Iraq," the news agency quoted General Dogan Gures, chief of the Turkish general staff, as saying.

It reported that Turkish jets took off from an air base at Diyarbakir at 4 a.m. (0200 GMT) and hit their targets. After that, it said, "large numbers" of helicopters took off from Hakkari, 550 kilometres to the east, with troops at 7 a.m. (0500 GMT) and returned an hour later.

At 10.30 a.m. (0830 GMT), a second wave of jets took off and headed for Iraq, the agency said. The new Turkish military operation followed the arrival in southeastern Turkey on Thursday of Gen. Gures and other top military commanders.

The raids appeared to be mounted in response to Kurdish rebel attacks Thursday on army outposts in the villages of Cayirli, Erisli and Cinarli near the border town of Cukurca in Hakkari province, Anatolia said. The night before, rebels ambushed an army patrol near the border town of Silopi, killing five soldiers and attacking an express train, killing one passenger.

Anatolia said at least 30 people were wounded in Friday's raids, including soldiers and civilians. Siamand Banaa, the Ankara representative of the Democratic Party of Kurdistan (KDP), a leading Iraqi Kurdish opposition movement, said he was told by Turkish officials that the raid had been mounted to capture about 400 PKK guerrillas who reportedly staged the recent raids.

Serchil Kazaz, another Kurdish spokesman representing the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan (PUK) here, said he had received no information so far from Kurdish sources as to the targets and possible casualties.

But Mr. Banaa voiced fears about possible new civilian victims. "Why is it always us who are suffering every time?" he lamented in a telephone interview with the Associated Press.

Turkey staged raids in northern Iraq on Aug. 5 and Oct. 11 after attacks by Turkish Kurdish guerrillas on border posts left 21 soldiers dead. Iraq condemned the attacks.

Turkey, dismissing protests from Iraq, Iraqi Kurdish groups in loose control of northern Iraq, and its NATO ally Germany, said last week it would mount further raids if necessary.

More than 3,300 people have been killed in the southeast since 1984 when the PKK began fighting for an independent state.

The cross-border thrust followed Sunday's general election which made Suleyman Demirel's True Path Party the biggest faction in parliament, but failed to give him a clear majority.

Two earlier Turkish incursions into Iraq were sparked by PKK raids that killed nine soldiers in a gendarmerie post on Aug. 4 and 11 soldiers on border patrol on Oct. 11.

Ankara says the PKK is exploiting a power vacuum in northern Iraq created when allied troops forced the Iraqi army to move south in April to let half a million Kurdish refugees go home.

The Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, led by Jalal Talabani, and the Kurdish Democratic Party of Masoud Barzani have complained that Turkish raids have killed and injured Kurdish civilians. Turkey has denied the charges.

Iraq twice protested to the United Nations after the second raid, accusing the Turks of using napalm on civilians.

Ankara dismissed the complaints as unacceptable, saying it was determined to wipe out PKK bases in northern Iraq.

Mr. Demirel, weighing coalition options before the newly-elected parliament convenes next week, has pledged to keep up the fight against the PKK. He won 178 seats in the 450-member assembly.

Mr. Talabani was due to visit Ankara Saturday before returning to northern Iraq after a lengthy foreign tour.

His spokesman Qazzaz said he would meet the U.S. charge d'affaires and the British, German and Japanese envoys. He could not say which Turkish officials he would meet.

Previously President Turgut Ozal's spokesman Kaya Toperi had handled contacts with Iraqi Kurdish leaders, but Mr. Demirel has sworn to force Mr. Ozal to keep out of diplomacy in future.

MIDDLE EAST NEWS IN BRIEF

King Hassan picks Jew as adviser

RABAT (R) — King Hassan has appointed Andre Azoulay, a Moroccan Jew, as his economic and financial adviser, palace sources said Friday. He is the second Jew to be appointed to high office since independence in 1956. French-educated Azoulay, 50, founded the defunct economic daily Maroc Informations in Casablanca and later became a senior executive of the French bank Paribas. In 1979 he founded the Identity and Dialogue Association in France to promote understanding between Israel and the Palestinians. He was made a member of the Legion of Honour by former French Prime Minister Michel Rocard in 1981 for his work as vice-president of the International Centre For Peace in the Middle East. Born in the coastal town of Essaouira south of Casablanca, Mr. Azoulay is a member of a distinguished Moroccan Jewish family. Leon Benzaquen, a Moroccan Jew, was minister of posts in the first independent government for two years at a time when the Moroccan Jewish community numbered 275,000. The community has since diminished to about 8,000 after mass migrations to Israel.

Two Sudanese accidentally killed

NAIROBI (AP) — Two Sudanese men were killed by bags of food airdropped to an estimated 100,000 stranded refugees near the southern Sudanese town of Pochala, the Red Cross said Friday. The airdrop was suspended temporarily pending further investigation of the Thursday accident, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) said in a statement. The two men, both in their 40s, were killed when part of a food load dropped from a C-130 Hercules cargo plane fell outside the designated drop zone, the ICRC said. Hundreds of people gather daily around Pochala's small, dirt airstrip awaiting the food's arrival. The needy in Pochala are Sudanese who returned from Ethiopia in May when fighting that toppled that country's government threatened their refugee camps. They walked several days, fording rivers, to reach Sudan's eastern border where they were marooned by vast swamps which cover much of the region during its annual rainy season. The rainy season is not expected to end until December, leaving the returnees dependent for their food on the Red Cross, which has delivered 2,500 tonnes to them since July. The ICRC said it aimed to use the airdrop to deliver 60 per cent of the 3,800 tonnes of food needed in Pochala until the end of the year. The rest will be brought in on small planes capable of landing on the rudimentary airstrip, the ICRC said.

Ethiopia, Sudan sign cooperation agreement

ADDIS ABABA (AP) — Ethiopia and Sudan have signed an agreement of cooperation and friendship ending years of acrimonious charges of interference in each others' affairs. The agreement was signed Thursday by the heads of state of the two countries at the end of a two-day state visit to Ethiopia by Lieutenant-General Omar Hassan Ali Bashir, Sudan's military leader. Gen. Bashir's was the first official visit by a head of state since former President Mengistu Haile Mariam was overthrown in May by the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Democratic Front. Under Colonel Mengistu, relations between the two East African neighbours were strained by their support for each others' insurgencies. After Mr. Mengistu's ouster, Ethiopia's rebels no longer needed refuge in Sudan and after seizing power they evicted Sudanese insurgents from Ethiopian territory. In a series of speeches during his visit, Gen. Bashir repeatedly said that a new era of peace and stability in the region was ushered in with Col. Mengistu's overthrow.

34 wells remain to be capped in Kuwait

KUWAIT (R) — Firefighters say they have capped all but 34 of a total of 732 oil wells set alight or damaged in the Gulf war, in February. A string of international teams fighting the roaring fires in Kuwait's oilfields expect the remaining wells to be capped in less than two weeks. "If we keep up the current pace, the wells will be out in less than two weeks," one American firefighter said. The last well will be capped by a Kuwaiti team. Up to 27 years tacking the world's worst oilfield disaster say they are now capping up to six wells a day compared to one every four days when they started battling the inferno in March. The teams say some of the remaining wells are difficult to cap because of ground fires raging around them. The emirate is currently producing 294,000 barrels of crude per day against a daily output of two million barrels before Iraq's invasion of Aug. 2, 1990.

Saudis send $3 million to PLO

TUNIS (R) — Saudi Arabia has sent the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) a cheque for nearly $3 million it collected from private donors, a senior Palestinian official said Friday. Abu Ala, director of the PLO's Economic and Financial Department, told Reuters the gift came from the Saudi Arabian Committee for the Support of the Palestinian Combatants. PLO relations with Riyadh soured during the Gulf war. PLO Executive Committee member Yasser Abed-Rabbo said Thursday after talks in Damascus with Saudi Foreign Minister Saud Al Faisal that Saudi Arabia had pledged to restore ties. Diplomats in Tunis said relations had improved because of the PLO's acceptance of the Middle East peace talks sponsored by Washington and Moscow. "Saudi Arabia is among the countries which are the most aware of Palestinian difficulties," Mr. Abu Ala said. "We are sure its support will continue and be intensified." Under resolutions adopted at a 1988 Arab summit in Algiers Saudi Arabia agreed to give the PLO $6.2 million a month.

Saudis planning purchase of British equipment

LONDON (AP) — Saudi Arabia expects to announce a major purchase of British defence equipment by the end of this year, the Times of London reported Friday quoting the Saudi ambassador to the United States. Ambassador Prince Bandar Ben Sultan did not specify the composition of the order or the amount. But the Times estimated the sale at $10 billion ($17 billion) over five years. It said the order is expected to include 48 Tornados and 60 Hawk jet fighters made by British Aerospace, 40 helicopters made by Westland Group, six minesweepers and some air-to-air missiles.

Palestinian rebels control 'Ain Al Hilweh

SIDON (AP) — Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Chairman Yasser Arafat moved fast Friday to end a revolt against his acceptance of the Middle East peace conference, Palestinian sources said.

The sources at Lebanon's largest Palestinian refugee camp said Mr. Arafat's command in Tunis was in radio contact with rebel commander Major Muir Makdah and that a compromise had been reached.

Maj. Makdah, who heads the security apparatus known as Force 17 of the PLO's mainstream Fatah faction, on Thursday seized control of Fatah's command headquarters in a day-long bloodless upheaval.

Maj. Makdah's 300 hardcore guerrillas controlled all Fatah's centers in 'Ain Al Hilweh Friday. They patrolled the streets and alleyways as well as the camp's inlets and outlets.

"What happened was merely a change in our military positions," Maj. Makdah told a news conference at Fatah's command headquarters after the compromise was reached.

"It does not mean a mutiny or breakdown, I am the man responsible for the camp's security and have done what was done to consolidate the security of Fatah's posts," said Maj. Makdah.

However, he stressed his opposition to the peace conference set for Wednesday in Madrid "because it is a conference of capitulation. I have a right to demonstrate my opposition."

Maj. Makdah, 35, also said he was against the recent conference in Tehran by about 450 Palestinian and Muslim leaders worldwide, which also opposed the Madrid conference.

Maj. Makdah opposes the peace conference because the PLO is not represented in the talks with a separate delegation to defend its demands. He and his followers believe the PLO's interests would be lost as other Arab delegates concentrate on their respective interests.

Reporters who toured the sprawling camp found no signs of tension among its estimated 50,000 inhabitants, including 39,000 U.N.-registered refugees.

Maj. Makdah had earlier issued a communiqué calling on Arafat loyalists to fall in line or leave the camp, saying "we are all duty-bound to defend our cause, the cause of Palestine. We say 'no' to the peace conference."

But after the compromise with the PLO headquarters, Maj. Makdah allowed the PLO security chief, Major Kamal Medhat, who fled to the southern-most Lebanese port of Tyre Thursday, to return to 'Ain Al Hilweh.

"What happened was not a revolt. We still are brothers," Maj. Medhat told reporters upon his return. "Fatah remains unequivocally under Arafat's leadership."

The sources here earlier predicted that Mr. Arafat would be able to resolve the revolt if he abolishes the salary cuts he had introduced for Fatah's guerrillas after the Gulf war.

"If Arafat loosens the purse, then there is a fair chance the revolt will be amicably settled and the PLO will be back in the saddle," said one source.

He said later that the Tunis command had actually agreed to abolish the salary cuts introduced last March after the Gulf war was over.

Mr. Arafat's austerity measures followed the suspension of the PLO subsidies by the oil-rich Gulf Arab states because Arafat sided with Iraq.

Maj. Makdah used the absence of Mr. Arafat's top lieutenants from the camp to stage his revolt. His men seized Fatah's command headquarters, which directs political and military activity of the organisation in South Lebanon.

Most of the pro-Arafat officials were in Tunis for consultations about the peace conference.

The majority of Maj. Makdah's followers belonged to the first wave of Palestinian emigration after the 1948 Arab-Israeli war, when Israel was created.

The pro-Arafat commanders in 'Ain Al Hilweh all belonged to the second Palestinian diaspora triggered by 1967 war.

Israel names hardline delegation

Shortly before the Israeli team was announced a row erupted which could threaten the conference, due to be opened by the U.S. and Soviet presidents in Madrid Wednesday.

Mr. Shami's bureau chief Yosi Abimeir said Israel would walk out if Palestinian delegate Sab Erekat attended the talks.

He said he hoped the United States would "handle" the problem before the conference convened.

Mr. Erekat told Cable News Network (CNN) television Wednesday the Palestinian team represented the PLO.

"We are the PLO delegation, this delegation was chosen by the PLO," Mr. Erekat said.

"Everybody heard Mr. Erekat's declarations so it is self-evident about his activity of membership (in the PLO)," Mr. Abimeir said.

Overall Palestinian delegation head Faisal Hussein distanced himself from Mr. Erekat saying only he or delegation spokeswoman Hanan Ashrawi could make official statements on behalf of the Palestinian team.

But Mr. Hussein's statement did not placate the Israelis.

"If we will see in front of our eyes people connected, belonging to or representing the PLO, either they or us will leave," he said. "If (Mr. Erekat's statements) causes problems, it causes trouble and we hope the Americans will handle it."

Profiles of Israeli delegation

FOLLOWING ARE profiles of the 14 Israeli negotiators named Friday for the Middle East peace conference to begin next week in Madrid, Spain.

Yitzhak Shamir, 76, Israel's prime minister, will head the delegation. Born in Poland, he immigrated to British-mandate Palestine in 1935 and became a leader of Lehi, the most extreme Jewish underground fighting the British. After statehood, Mr. Shamir spent years with the Mossad intelligence service before his 1970 election to parliament. He inherited the prime ministry in 1983 from Menachem Begin, was deputy prime minister 1984-86 and resumed the premiership in 1986.

Yosef "Yossi" Ben-Aharon, 59, is expected to head the bilateral talks with Syria. He is director-general of the prime ministry and Mr. Shamir's chief political adviser. Born in Jerusalem, Mr. Ben-Aharon spent most of his early years in Port Said, Egypt. He majored in Arabic and Middle East history at Hebrew University. He was deputy counsel-general in New York in the late 1970s.

Elyakim Rubinstein, 44, cabinet secretary closely associated with Mr. Shamir. He was born in Tel Aviv and holds a B.A. in Middle Eastern studies from Tel Aviv University. After compulsory army service, he joined the army's intelligence branch. He fought in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars and in Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Brigadier General Yekutiel "Kuti" Mor, 45, head of analysis in military intelligence and an adviser to Mr. Arens. He was born in Tel Aviv and holds a B.A. in Middle Eastern studies from Tel Aviv University. After compulsory army service, he joined the army's intelligence branch. He fought in the 1967 and 1973 Middle East wars and in Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Sallai Meridor, 36, is political adviser to Defence Minister Moshe Arens. He holds a B.A. in Israeli history from Hebrew University and was an emissary of the World Zionist Organisation in the United States.

Brigadier General Ekinol Mor, 45, head of analysis in military intelligence and an adviser to Mr. Arens. He was born in Tel Aviv and holds a B.A. in Middle Eastern studies from Tel Aviv University. Tough choices are shaping up for Israel

By Anthony Lewis

BOSTON — No one who knows the Middle East will celebrate yet. The substance of a successful negotiation, the give-and-take needed to make it work, is still hard to envisage. But there are going to be negotiations, starting next week in Madrid, and that is remarkable enough.

For the first time in its 43 years as a state, Israel will meet face-to-face with each of its Arab neighbours — and with representative Palestinians. All the issues between them will be on the table: peace, security, land, people.

It is going to happen now because of President George Bush and Secretary of State James Baker. Secretary of State Baker spent much of the last five months wheeling and pushing the intractable parties. But this success was possible only because the president had the vision and courage to commit himself to this conference.

President Bush seized the moment, after the Gulf war, for a new effort at Arab-Israeli peace. He understood that some fundamental power relationships had changed. Those changes offer hope for an onset of reason in the Middle East.

The end of the cold war has had an immediate impact on the region. Soviet military support for Syria has ebbed, making President Hafez Al Assad look to improved relations with the United States. Israeli and U.S. fear of communist influence has abated, making possible a joint Soviet-American invitation to Madrid.

The decline in Soviet power is also having a profound impact on U.S.-Israeli relations. It has weakened, or removed, one basis for the close ties of recent decades and for huge levels of U.S. aid: the idea that Israel was a strategic asset for America in a vital part of the world.

The Gulf war showed that U.S. armed forces could act in the Middle East without Israel. In that war, Israel was a complication rather than an asset in U.S. military calculations.

Americans are still committed to help Israel, for reasons of history and conscience. But it is clear that a more detached relationship is developing, one in which America will more freely weigh its own values and interests. The Economist wrote last month: "Americans still express their moral commitment to Israel's survival; but Israel's moral case grows steadily weaker as it refuses to extend to the Palestinians the right of self-determination that has become a cornerstone of the emerging world order. A peace which left Israel ruling over millions of voteless Palestinians has become unthinkable."

Israelis are increasingly aware that they cannot expect unconditional support from the United States, that they can maintain the vital American connection only by paying attention to U.S. interests. Mr. Bush made that bluntly clear when he postponed consideration of loan guarantees; too bluntly, most Israelis thought, although they understood the larger point.

In this new relationship, the territories occupied by Israel since 1967 are the crunch. U.S. policy is to end Israeli control of the West Bank and Gaza Strip and their more than 1.5 million inhabitants. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and much of his government are committed to creating annexation of the territories.

A choice is thus shaping up for Israel: Keep the occupied territories or keep U.S. support.

Economic realities are also pushing Israel to make a choice about the occupied territories. Bernard Avishai explores the reasons for this in the forthcoming issue of the Harvard Business Review. The $10 billion sought from the United States in loan guarantees is to build housing for Soviet immigrants to Israel. But if those immigrants are to have jobs, Mr. Avishai says, Israel will need two or three times that much in investment capital from the world. And Israel will have to change its protective economic policies and become part of the global market, using its special scientific and intellectual talents.

But there will be no large-scale foreign investment, Mr. Avishai writes, and no long-term contracts with Israeli companies while the world sees insecurity over the issue of the occupied territories. "Israel can have the Whole Land of Israel," he concludes, "or it can have a piece of the global economy." — The New York Times.

No peace with hunger

THE FINDING, on the eve of the holding of the Madrid peace conference, by independent groups that infant and child mortality rate in Iraq has quadrupled since the end of the Gulf crisis because of food and medicine shortage is appalling and sad. The Iraqi people are increasingly becoming victims of a merciless power struggle between their regime and a heartless new world order. That innocent people have fallen victim to a series of resolutions adopted by the larger international community is tragic in every sense of the word.

The Iraqis are incapable, as the West well knows, of toppling their regime. The prospects of them doing so is very grim indeed. Meanwhile, the regime, itself submerged in its own rhetoric, has failed to, or has no intention of, rehabilitating itself into either its Arab environs or the community of nations at large. It is most unfortunate therefore that the Iraqi people, for long an oppressed lot, should be the victims of an endless and cruel fight between the president of Iraq and the president of the U.S. The U.S. Secretary of Defence Dick Cheney was quoted recently as predicting the Iraqi president's "days were numbered." Only two weeks ago the Iraqi president himself swore that Iraq would not give in to Western pressure and that his country could live with the economic sanctions for 20 years if need be. What is strikingly clear is that the people of Iraq will bear the brunt of this merciless war between the U.S. on the one side and the Iraqi leadership on the other. While it seems not possible to convince the Iraqi president to retire and spare his people more misery and agony, it looks equally unlikely to imagine that the Iraqi people under pressure to manage their basic life would revolt and bring change to their devastated country.

It has been proven on other occasions that sanctions only strengthen the grip of regimes on the people. If anything, the Iraqi people need to live decently before attempting to make political change. The Iraqi regime, composed of army generals and Baath party officials has since the Gulf war ended consolidated its hold to power and is increasingly showing signs of confidence. Meanwhile, the Iraqi people should not be made to endure the brunt of the sanctions. These sanctions were originally mandated to force Iraq to abandon Kuwait; they were not given sufficient time to work and, therefore, they could not achieve that objective. The objective was later changed. The blockade would remain on until the leadership was toppled. The sanctions are already more than one year old. Their effect on the regime are minimal. The Iraqi people as such had very little to do with the Kuwait invasion or the standoff that ensued. In particular, the children of Iraq are the ultimate victims. This shameful state of affairs should not continue. Little children should not be made the victims of governments whether they are democrats or dictators.

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

FURTHER to its intentions to sabotage the peace conference, Israel has carried out a provocative action by moving the headquarters of the border guards to East Jerusalem, Al Ra'i daily said in commenting on the obstacles in the path of the peace process. The paper also referred to a statement by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir in Strasbourg in which he said that there was no occupied Arab territory which can be exchanged for peace with the Arabs. All these provocative actions, while the time for the peace conference draws near, indicate clearly that the Jewish state is determined to keep Arab land and turn down any attempt to implement U.N. Security Council resolutions. It said that these actions are coupled with an escalation of terrorist practices against the Palestinians and by statements by extremists attacking the idea of the conference and the bid to achieve peace with the Palestinians and the Arabs because this would mean a withdrawal from occupied land. It is good that the Arab parties are well aware of Israel's real intentions, but such awareness is not enough to force the Israelis to succumb to the will of the world community, said the paper. The paper demanded that the superpowers exert further serious efforts to force Israel to give up its terrorist policies which aim at sabotaging the conference. The paper said that the world community is now well aware of Israel's manoeuvres and can by no means allow Israel to undermine the opportunity for peace.

A columnist in Al Ra'i daily welcomed the declared intention of a majority of expatriates to invest in productive projects in Jordan and said that thousands of those who came back to the homeland have vast experience and substantial capital, vital for any venture. Nazih said that these expatriates are determined to invest in projects not only to benefit themselves but also to serve their country which is offering them the chance to operate and prosper. The writer commended the government's trend to offer facilities for such projects but noted that any venture requires preparations and good planning. He said that the expatriates are in need of further facilities from the government before they can embark with greater confidence on projects useful for Jordan and they are also in need of advice which the concerned ministries can offer through their specialised units. The writer said that all concerned government departments are called upon to expand the margin of facilities so far offered to investors and noted the exceptional circumstances facing Jordan at the moment require exceptional decisions and more courageous steps leading towards prosperity.

U.S. media play down conference

By Allison Kaplan

WASHINGTON — Far from creating fireworks, the announcement of the Middle East peace conference hit here with a dull thud.

Though the painstaking progress toward Madrid has been dutifully reported in the media, the peace process is hardly the talk of the town — or the country.

Foreign news, other than war, traditionally fails to grip the imagination of the average American, and even more so when the country is consumed with domestic concerns. In the past week, Middle East developments have clearly been overshadowed by the aftermath of the messy and more titillating soap opera surrounding the battle over Clarence Thomas's nomination to the Supreme Court.

Even foreign policy specialists, Midwest experts and those who are following the process closely greeted the announcement of the conference without much excitement. Looking toward Madrid, their predictions are somber, often downright pessimistic, with most anticipating an impasse over the principle of land for peace that will be difficult, if not impossible to overcome.

Commentators are stressing that, while President Bush and Secretary of State James Baker may have gotten the parties to the negotiating table, they have no idea what they are going to do once they are there. Even optimists say that Mr. Bush's stated goal of "real peace" is a remote possibility at best.

"I wouldn't bet my ranch" on the chances of a diplomatic triumph, said ABC News White House correspondent Brit Hume, a tennis partner of Mr. Bush's, told his viewers yesterday.

Any hope that the ceremonial opening will be followed by concrete progress is based on the prospect that the same forces that brought the parties to the table — a desire not to anger the U.S. — will keep them there.

Arabs and Israelis are "not saying yes to each other yet," said William Quandt, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institute and a former top State Department official. "They're saying yes to the U.S."

He predicted that, after the ceremonial opening, the process will be marked by "pauses and recesses and stalemates and lots of acrimony," and it will break down when the parties move to bilateral negotiations.

"Leaving the parties more or less on their own is a guarantee that they're going to confront each other with the starkness of their real positions, and it will be a stalemate."

Another former State Department official, Richard Murphy, appearing with Mr. Quandt on the MacNeil/Lehrer News Hour, agreed that by the bilaterals will likely break down. "Within a matter of days," he said, the Arabs and Israelis will realise "that mediation by the U.S., perhaps also by the Soviet Union, will be essential, and they can't make it on their own."

The more cynical believe the entire Madrid effort is based not on the genuine desire of the parties in the region, but on Mr. Bush's desire to create a grand photo opportunity on the eve of his 1992 re-election campaign.

Though he can still claim the Gulf war was a victory, Mr. Bush can point to few tangible results. Saddam Hussein is still in power, the restored Kuwaiti monarchy is far from democracy, and American efforts to create a post-war security structure to protect the oil-rich region seem to be coming apart. There were reports yesterday that the U.S. is being forced to hire home equipment it had wanted to pre-position in Saudi Arabia, because of Saudi objections to a continuing American military presence.

Since the conference is meant to be Mr. Bush's Middle East triumph, administration officials are reminding the press that the fact the parties are talking is an accomplishment, even if it does not result in a tangible progress.

With so little of the optimism that surrounded the Camp David process, there seems to be no reason to hope for similar achievements in Madrid.

"The diplomacy leading up to the peace conference has been a sterile exercise in closed-door deal-making involving no more than a few dozen people at most in any country," Thomas Friedman, the New York Times State Department correspondent wrote. "No Arab or Israeli leader has prepared his people for a historic transformation in relations. But without such a change in attitudes, no real peace will be possible."

Palestinians suggest measures

meetings will indeed be held and "we will not waste any time in Amman." Dr. Abdul Shafi, 72, told journalists the Palestinian delegation that he heads will demand the right to self-determination.

"We are going to demand our rights to national independence and the right of refugees to return within the resolutions of the Security Council, and we go to the conference with all sincerity and dedication," Dr. Abdul Shafi said.

Dr. Ashrawi, who will most likely act as the spokesperson for the Palestinian delegation at the Madrid conference, vowed that the Palestinian team would do its utmost to ensure that the rights of the Palestinians were met.

"We are extremely serious and extremely dedicated and we are going to do our best to make sure that this is an even-handed process that is going to bring about a just peace," Dr. Ashrawi stressed.

She said that they would press for achieving Palestinian national rights and to ensure that peace be based on "symmetry and equity for all parties." The U.S. supports Palestinian "legitimate political" rights but has not yet endorsed Palestinian "national" rights since that might imply support for an independent Palestinian state, which Washington opposes.

She described the Palestinian attendance at the peace conference as very significant and important, but added that "pain" accompanied the Palestinians as they head for the conference.

"As we left there were many people in tears; we were in tears," Dr. Ashrawi said.

News agencies reported that a cheering and shouting crowd had sung the Palestinian national anthem as the tearful Palestinian team flashed V-for-victory signs and clenched their

"It's not the fact that the Palestinians are recognised now as speaking for themselves as a national people with rights, but it is also the fact that we enter this process with hand-knives," Dr. Ashrawi told reporters in Amman. "We enter the (peace) process while our people are being held as hostages under occupation."

"We are being forced to negotiate with our occupiers and we have a whole population that is being subjected to the most brutal treatment," Dr. Ashrawi said.

She added that the conference has adopted in many ways Israel's pre-conditions, which she described as being "very painful to us."

"We also cannot accept the exclusion of our legitimate leadership (PLO) from the negotiations, but we accepted all these unjust and painful constraints because we feel that we have to give this peace conference all the support it takes to get it moving and we have to get Israel to the negotiating table to see who is putting all the obstacles for peace in the region," she said, still smiling after hours of travelling.

She rejected suggestions that the issue of Jewish settlements in the occupied territories be negotiated at the conference, saying that the settlements were a violation of the Geneva conventions and that Israel had to first adhere to the agreements of the Geneva conventions before negotiations start.

"According to this convention, we cannot negotiate anything with the occupier while it is still occupying land and violating our rights. All violations will have to cease in order to start real negotiations," Dr. Ashrawi stressed. She added that besides the continued building of settlements, the Jewish state still expects Palestinians and continues to hold 19,000 political prisoners and detainees.

She told reporters later on the day that the Palestinian team had "a long list of confidence-building measures" before it could start negotiations with Israel.

"We have a list of 25 confidence-building items, and we do not consider the cessation of settlements as a confidence-building measure," Dr. Ashrawi said. "The settlements have to be stopped immediately in order to legalise the Israeli position in the conference."

She added that another demand would be to release all Palestinian political prisoners and detainees, the reopening of all their closed institutions, the lifting of censorship and legalising all political parties.

Dr. Ashrawi also said that the 46-month-old intifada would intensify as their negotiating team attends the Middle East peace conference, and described the uprising as the "strength and legitimacy (behind) the Palestinian delegation."

"There is a tremendous spirit of determination among the Palestinians, and I think it will intensify; it will be more developed and consolidated," Dr. Ashrawi said.

Dr. Ashrawi described the agreements reached between the five Arab foreign ministers in Damascus as "extremely encouraging and heartening to the Palestinians under occupation."

In the meeting, Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Egypt and the PLO agreed that no single Arab side and Israel would take place at the conference.

"We still think that the multi-lateral talks should not proceed unless the cause of the conflict is removed, which is the Israeli occupation of Arab lands," Dr. Ashrawi said.

Following are the 14 Palestinians in the "guidance committee"

Fahad Hussein, 50, head of the committee.

Radwan Abu Ayyash, 41, a native of the Askar refugee camp near the West Bank city of Nablus and former head of the Arab Journalists Association in the occupied territories.

Abdullah Hadi Abu Khussa, 48, from the Shatti refugee camp in the Gaza Strip.

Saleh Abu Laban, 41, a resident of the Dehshat refugee camp in the West Bank.

Ziad Abu Zaid, 51, a lawyer and native of the village of Izzariya in the occupied West Bank.

Ahmad Yaziji, 45, a surgeon born in Gaza City in what is now the occupied Gaza Strip, and a former director of the city's Shifa hospital.

Hanan Ashrawi, 45, a native of Jerusalem and resident of Ramallah. Radi Al Jarai, 40, a native of the West Bank village of Tulkara, is a reporter for Al Fajr.

Zuhair Kanaani, 46, was born in Jerusalem and remains a resident of the city. She founded and heads the Palestinian Federation of Women's Action committees in the occupied territories.

Rashid Khalidi, 40, who lives in the United States. He taught at the American University of Beirut before the Lebanon civil war. In the early 1980s he joined the political science faculty at Columbia University in New York City. He now teaches at Chicago State University in Illinois.

Kamel Mansour, 50, a Palestinian author living in Paris. He was a researcher at the Foundation of Palestinian Studies in Beirut.

Sari Nusseibeh, 42, is a professor of philosophy at Bir Zeit University.

Anis Al Ousseini, 60, a Palestinian lawyer now living in London. He worked in Kuwait for more than a decade.

Jamil Tarifi, 44, a native of Ramallah. Disclosure of a private meeting he held in the summer of 1989 with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir caused in a stir in Jewish and Palestinian circles.

The week in print

Sound preparations for Madrid conference

JORDANIAN newspapers directed their attention in the past week to the peace conference due to open in Madrid at the end of the month and discussed preparations, like the Damascus meeting, as well as a number of domestic issues.

All three dailies Friday expressed satisfaction with the outcome of the Damascus meeting attended by the foreign ministers of Jordan, Syria, Lebanon, Egypt and the PLO.

It is most satisfying to hear the foreign ministers reaching consensus on a unified Arab stand at the conference and to hear that the ministers would be holding periodic meetings to reassess the peace process, said Al Ra'i daily. Such agreement will no doubt give the Arab side to the peace process further backing and impetus for their work at the negotiating table, the paper said. The Damascus declaration was a victory for the pan-Arab nationalists, paving the ground for a more fruitful cooperation in all matters of concern to the Arab Nation, said the paper.

Al Dustour described the outcome of the Damascus parley as fulfilling the aspirations of the Arab masses who hope that the Arabs will stand firm together at the Madrid meeting. The paper expressed hope that the foreign ministers will now move on to more constructive steps leading towards the final Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories so that peace and stability can be established in the region.

Sawt Al Shaab daily expressed satisfaction with the Arab foreign ministers' reaffirmation in their final statement of the need for the conference to achieve an Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied territories, including Jerusalem.

The Israeli negotiating team is being led by Yitzhak Shamir, and extremists, and it is only natural for the Arabs to adopt a firm stand in the face of the coming challenge, the paper said. Unity, the paper added, is a must if the Arabs are to achieve success and ensure the restoration of Arab lands and Arab rights.

Discussing the prospects of success and failure of the Madrid conference, Salameh Ekour, who writes for Sawt Al Shaab, said that since the peace conference is regarded as a battle, the Jordanian people should be ready for it. The peace conference is not only for the government to handle but for all the political, technical, scientific and other forces to join; it will be a battle which will decide the future of the region, Ekour said. He said that those opposing the peace conference are also needed since this is a national battle, requiring expertise from any source. The writer said that the Arab side should leave no room for the Israelis to win the upper hand in the coming negotiations.

Dwelling on the same theme, Fakhri Kavar, who writes for Al Ra'i daily, said that Jordan Television and other official information media have been reflecting only the views of the government and repeating the views of only those citizens supporting the peace conference.

The writer criticised the official information media for not opening the way for those who reject the conference. The writer said that Jordan Television would have won real credibility had it given the chance to the rejectionists to voice their views as this, he said, would be a real practice of democracy.

His views were backed by Fahd Al Fnekh, a columnist who writes for Al Ra'i. The writer said that the week-long campaign launched by the official media did not include any voices opposing the conference.

The campaign was not well planned and the interviews were done with only those persons who represent very limited number of Jordanians and not with the heads of political groups, the writer said.

He said that the campaign was counter-productive and was conducted in a way that would left understand that there was serious opposition to Jordan in going to the conference.

Columnist Taher Al Udwan, who writes in Al Dustour, discussed the Tehran Conference, called to voice opposition to the peace conference. Iran, which is strongly opposed to the peace conference, and claims to be supporting the Palestinians, should release the Iraqi military and commercial planes and open its borders with Iraq to break the embargo imposed on the Iraqi people as a sign of goodwill said the writer.

He said that Iran should back the Iraqis who have been trying to liberate Palestine and should not have sided with the Americans who launched a devastating war and aggression against the Iraqi people.

His views were backed by Mahmoud Al Rimawi, a columnist in Al Ra'i daily, who said that mere slogans issued by Tehran can by no means end Israel's occupation of Palestinian land. The Palestinian people under occupation are awaiting real help coming from Arab and Islamic countries which can speed up their liberation from oppression, the writer said.

Some columnists turned their attention to domestic issues, with Salah Abdul Samad, in Al Ra'i, dwelling in particular on the government's declared intention of increasing the salaries of government employees and civil servants.

The writer said that many of these employees are indeed afraid that the raise would bring about a new wave of soaring prices that would not match the increase in salaries.

The writer suggested that the government take the views of the economists and offer the public full information about this matter and also take strict measures against profiteers.

Columnist Mohammad Kawash, in Al Dustour, called on the government to offer the civil servants substantial salary increases to make up for the soaring prices. He said that employees' salaries in the private sector were far higher than those of employees working for the government.

'Palestinians must struggle inside and outside the peace conference to achieve their rights'

Europe can play a major role in settling the Palestinian problem — PLO official

By Sama Attieh
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Negotiations with Israel at the U.S.-Soviet sponsored Middle East peace conference is a form of continued Palestinian struggle, and the intifada and armed struggle against Israeli military targets should be intensified while the conference convenes, said a senior advisor to Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Chairman Yasser Arafat.

Nabil Shaath, who is a member of the PLO mainstream Fatah's Revolutionary Command Council, told a large crowd at Abdull Hameed Shoman Foundation last Wednesday night that the PLO had tried to achieve "victories" before the convening of the Madrid conference next Wednesday, but failed.

Dr. Shaath explained to the audience that the PLO had tried to achieve "victories" before the convening of the Madrid conference next Wednesday, but failed.

He said that the organisation had tried to take advantage of the new circumstances in the past weeks and received an independent invitation to the conference, to give the chance to the Palestinian leadership to personally name its delegation and impose its own conditions before the start of the negotiations, "but the door was closed."

Some Palestinians have been critical of the PLO, for making concessions to Israeli conditions, mainly because only West Bank and Gaza Strip make up the Palestinian delegation, without representation from Jerusalem. The PLO also gave in trying to put a stop to continued Israeli settlements in the occupied territories before the negotiations started. Dr. Shaath added that it was clear to everyone that the Palestinian delegates were appointed by the PLO and that it would continue to take instructions from the organisation.

"But we did not make one single important concession before the negotiations," Dr. Shaath stated. "We did not compromise on the right of the Palestinian people for self-determination on their soil or the independent Palestinian state, in confederation with Jordan, with Jerusalem as its capital."

"We did not give up on our right to achieve complete Israeli withdrawal from the land it occupied in 1967, and we did not give up our right for Israel to stop the Jewish settlements immediately," Dr. Shaath went on. "But we could not achieve these goals before the negotiations, and if we did, they would have been victories."

He described as an achievement, however, the American letter of assurances which, he said, had stated that Jerusalem was considered part of Security Council Resolution 242, that is, part of the Israeli occupied territory after 1967.

The Palestinian official went on to say that Israel was no longer needed as a strategic ally to the U.S. after the Gulf war, and that peace and stability were necessary for the U.S.

ership sees that they are not achieving anything from the conference, or asked to make concessions they reject, "we leave the conference and continue the struggle otherwise."

The Palestinian official said that the Palestinians should take advantage of current circumstances, in the world, saying that they were now entering a new era.

"But this conference is not for free. There is a strategic opportunity, a strategic gap that we should breathe through to achieve something, in addition to continued struggle on all fronts," he said.

Dr. Shaath explained to the audience that the PLO had tried to achieve "victories" before the convening of the Madrid conference next Wednesday, but failed.

He said that the organisation had tried to take advantage of the new circumstances in the past weeks and received an independent invitation to the conference, to give the chance to the Palestinian leadership to personally name its delegation and impose its own conditions before the start of the negotiations, "but the door was closed."

Some Palestinians have been critical of the PLO, for making concessions to Israeli conditions, mainly because only West Bank and Gaza Strip make up the Palestinian delegation, without representation from Jerusalem. The PLO also gave in trying to put a stop to continued Israeli settlements in the occupied territories before the negotiations started. Dr. Shaath added that it was clear to everyone that the Palestinian delegates were appointed by the PLO and that it would continue to take instructions from the organisation.

"But we did not make one single important concession before the negotiations," Dr. Shaath stated. "We did not compromise on the right of the Palestinian people for self-determination on their soil or the independent Palestinian state, in confederation with Jordan, with Jerusalem as its capital."

"We did not give up on our right to achieve complete Israeli withdrawal from the land it occupied in 1967, and we did not give up our right for Israel to stop the Jewish settlements immediately," Dr. Shaath went on. "But we could not achieve these goals before the negotiations, and if we did, they would have been victories."

He described as an achievement, however, the American letter of assurances which, he said, had stated that Jerusalem was considered part of Security Council Resolution 242, that is, part of the Israeli occupied territory after 1967.

The Palestinian official went on to say that Israel was no longer needed as a strategic ally to the U.S. after the Gulf war, and that peace and stability were necessary for the U.S.

now that it controlled the region.

"The era of no-war, no-peace in the region has ended with a war and now the Americans want peace," Dr. Shaath said, adding that this was not in Israel's interest.

He predicted that the Israeli lobby in Washington would crumble, and described the group as a "strategic lobby that is an American trick created by American administrations to use as an excuse to its Arab allies that it could not compromise on Palestine."

Dr. Shaath warned, however, that the U.S. was not an ally that could be trusted and its "enemies of today will not become her friends tomorrow." He also warned that Israel could propose a new role for itself that could be in the U.S. interest in the region.

Dr. Shaath also stressed that the American powerful role in the world after the Gulf war and after the end of the cold war with the Soviet Union was only temporary, that it would "last five to ten years." He attributed his argument to the fact that the U.S. was suffering a large financial deficit in its budget.

"The Americans could not even afford to finance its war in the Gulf," Dr. Shaath commented. He also noted that Europe had provided the world with $29 billion in aid in 1990, as compared to $7 billion from the U.S.

Europe's role

Dr. Shaath's lecture, in fact, focused on Europe's role concerning the Palestinian question. He stressed that for Europe to achieve its interests in the region, it felt it had to get closer to the Palestinian question and did so by mainly standing by the rights of the Palestinians.

He said that the European Community's (EC) aid to Palestinians in the Israeli occupied territories in 1991 alone far exceeded that which was provided by all the Arab countries together.

"The Europeans gave $350 million in Palestinian aid in 1991 alone, and that was only the amount that was actually received by the Palestinians and not just what was allocated by the EC," Dr. Shaath said, adding that Israel had placed obstacles in front of the Palestinians in getting the full aid allocated by the EC.

He added that $130 million of that amount, 70 per cent of which was given by Germany and Britain alone, was allocated as direct aid to Palestinians. The aid usually goes to UNRWA or to Palestinian institutions that support local projects. Dr. Shaath said that the aid was contributed by both governments and the public. "In Italy alone, 2,000 families send monthly aid in the form of adopting Palestinian children," he said.

Dr. Shaath also said that the EC's financial role included the support of free trade, of direct Palestinian exports to the EC countries and placed trade restrictions against Israel until they forced the Jewish state to permit direct Palestinian export of citrus fruit to the EC countries without passing through the Israeli authorities first. He added that the group also froze a scientific agreement with Israel to pressure it into reopening the Arab universities which were closed by the Israeli authorities during the intifada, but that these efforts were delayed by the Gulf crisis.

"Despite all the American pressure, Europe was the only party that directly placed restrictions against Israel and succeeded in achieving its aims," Dr. Shaath stressed.

He recalled a discussion he personally had with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar three months ago, during which Dr. Shaath asked him why the Fourth Geneva convention was not implemented in the occupied territories to protect the Palestinians there. Dr. Shaath quoted Mr. de Cuellar as saying: "I wrote to all the countries that signed the Geneva Convention agreements and only 32 of the 165 signatory countries responded. Not one single Arab, Asian or African country responded." Dr. Shaath said that all the EC countries and other European countries were the only ones to respond to a call for protection of Palestinians under Israeli occupation.

Dr. Shaath said that Europe was important for the Palestinians in the near future because "it will head the implementation of the Fourth Geneva Conventions" in the occupied territories. He referred to a conference due to be held in Budapest next month dealing with this issue and which will be headed by the EC.

"And if we can protect our people during the peace conference through Europe's forcing Israel to implement the Geneva Convention agreements — it means stopping deportations, the demolishing of homes, arbitrary measures and the building of Jewish settlements — then we have achieved a lot as we negotiate in this conference," he added.

Dr. Shaath described the Middle East as the "southern flank" of Europe and said its stability depended on stability in the Middle East.

"Many would say that Europe does what the U.S.

asks it to do. This may be true, but Europe always played a positive and practical — not just theoretical — role concerning the Palestinian question in order to achieve a distinguished role in the Middle East and North Africa," Dr. Shaath said.

He added that Europe saw in "the independent Palestinian state in confederation with Jordan a Singapore of the Middle East." The official said that Europe saw in the Palestinian and Jordanian people 300,000 university graduates who "have great abilities in engineering, electronics and computers."

"They see an opportunity of development here and see themselves as political and economic allies," Dr. Shaath said. He added that in the last nine months he talked to every European foreign minister. "They don't see beggars in us, but see an ability and future capability," he insisted, adding that the "temporary American hegemony" would end with a pluralistic world, with Europe as a major power.

European defence plans in turmoil as NATO, EC summits draw near

By Nicholas Doughty
Reuter

BRUSSELS — Plans to set up a European defence policy for the 21st century are starting to fall apart in acrimony and confusion, with just a few weeks to go before NATO and the European Community hold vital summit meetings.

The argument of baffling complexity even to those involved in the negotiations, springs from one question: Will the United States and Western Europe remain partners in politics, trade and defence, or will the traditional bonds that have linked them for decades snap and give way to rivalry?

Competing views on this underlie the debate over how far, if at all, the European Community should take over some of the defence responsibilities that have always been the preserve of the U.S.-led North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

"It's a very messy debate. There are differences which are completely irreconcilable, the way things stand at the moment," said Simon Lunn, deputy secretary-general of the Brussels-based North Atlantic Assembly.

France, Germany and Spain threw fuel on the fire on Friday with a controversial meeting in Paris at which they called again for a common defence policy within a future federal EC.

They agreed elements of a joint foreign and security policy should be decided by majority voting within the community. Britain, Denmark and Ireland regard this area as the sole preserve of national governments.

Some EC members denounced the Paris meeting as an attempt by heavyweights France and Germany to circumvent discussions among all 12 members and force the issue before a December summit of EC leaders in the Dutch town of Maastricht.

France has taken the lead because it resents U.S. leadership of NATO and wants independent European defences as part of greater economic and political integration.

To confuse matters further, Britain and Italy — the two other major EC states — launched a proposal of their own 10 days ago endorsing a community foreign and defence policy as long as it did nothing to undermine NATO.

NATO officials publicly welcome moves toward closer European integration, arguing that a more coherent policy will lift some of the cold war defence burden imposed on the United States. But they are also worried the EC might go too far.

Washington, concerned about losing its influence over the alliance, has repeatedly said it will not accept any arrangement that undermines NATO, marginalises any of its members or duplicates its functions.

"We've spelled out our views and we stick to them," said one U.S. official at NATO. Washington is backed by NATO members Turkey, Norway and Iceland, which are not part of the community.

The unspoken warning is that a "go-it-alone" policy by the Europeans could lead the United States to bring its troops home, thus breaking the trans-Atlantic ties at the heart of NATO.

Washington already plans to withdraw half of the 300,000 U.S. troops stationed in Europe now the cold war is over.

"You have two extreme views — the French and the Americans — and various other countries who seem to be somewhere in the middle and not very clear," said Mr. Lunn.

Although all but one of the EC member states are also in NATO, the debate is difficult to follow because some countries seem to contradict themselves.

Germany professes deep commitment to the trans-Atlantic bond, but has also worried Washington and London by endorsing France's ferociously independent line.

"The Germans want an American wife and a French mistress," said one NATO official. "The problem is that it is impossible to sleep with both of them."

NATO, due to hold a summit in Rome early next month to set out a new role for itself in the post-cold war world, has also shown signs of confusion.

Alliance foreign ministers agreed a lengthy statement on the so-called "European defence identity" at a Copenhagen meeting in June, which officials say left many questions unresolved.

"It basically pleased everyone by saying: 'The Europeans can do what they like, so long as they don't meddle with NATO,'" said one senior alliance official. "We still haven't resolved the basic contradiction inherent in that statement."

Democracy — an idea whose time has come, and maybe gone

By I.F. Abdullah

THE system of American democracy is very rigid, static, and very difficult to change. This becomes clear when every new president begins to tackle the national debt issue and fails. No congressman or any entitled group or state is willing to compromise any of the money or benefits they have for the sake of the country as a whole as obviously nobody is willing to do such "sacrifice."

The president quickly realises it is a losing battle and the only other option an administration has to bail out the system and cut the deficit is by grabbing from elsewhere, resulting in a war where the goods are secured from some other country.

Western democracies are all hostages to this phenomenon, and they now team up and become allies when it comes to the "heist" from elsewhere. Democracy is now working to the detriment of its constituency, and the "tyranny of the majority" in a democracy prevents any changes since a majority always has a stake and benefit from the status quo which allowed the formation of such a majority in the first place.

Democracy is advocated to the Third World by "well meaning" countries with established democracies. These entities fully realise that when democracy takes root, countries become very difficult to manage and political systems become vulnerable to outside influence buying their way through ever available pundits at the expense of the national interest. Democracy is a ticket to destabilise and control countries, and maintain chaos under its guise.

Democracy can lead to indecision and immobilise progress. It should be noted that the Arab World, and especially the Palestinians, are victims of Israeli democracy, since any decision on settlements can result in the downfall of the then current government. The whole country goes into indecision for sometime until a new government is operational again. This inability to make decisions has been exploited by all parties in Israel to maintain the status quo and sustain an inflexible policy.

Many factors required for a successful democracy are missing in the Arab countries: there aren't enough divergent special interests to counteract each other; there aren't enough large scale establishments with hundreds of thousands of employees to create powerful unions; and there is substantial fragmentation among the citizenry, except for the dominant party. On another front, the media is not profitable enough to maintain independence, and there is substantial vulnerability to outside interests and influence offering personal gain at the expense of national interests.

Democracy can be substituted in Third World countries by "freedom of action." In a world where ideology is becoming secondary and capitalism is becoming the main preoccupation and aim, very few captivating motives remain.

Whether freedom of action in a stable environment, when granted by a benevolent government attuned to the interests and desires of its citizenry, can be the necessary ingredient for progress, especially when stability is achieved through "dominance of a party or clan, or a tribal collective government, leads in time to a 'western-style democracy' (regardless of its merits), while maintaining a stable government, is very difficult to prove, as the experience of Lebanon, India, many countries of Latin America, and the Soviet Union has shown.

Freedom of action may be the realistic expectation, with ambition fulfilled and challenge derived from personal endeavours, achievements, and business and professional successes in lieu of ideological political expression. Until such time when national experiments can develop workable methods of achieving the goals of textbook democracy within the selfish interest struggle of groups, individuals, and ruling establishments, stability remains a powerful asset for nations. The inequities inherent in maintaining such stability must be weighed against chaos, capital flight, and economic self-destruction. Recent history has been very positive, and in an age of instant communication, awareness and open societies, governments could not sustain the iron rule or forcible control of societies and have started to answer to the needs of their population in civilised and internationally accepted norms.

Real functional democracy is much like a luxury; only the wealthy can afford it. In the scope of Third World countries, very few are the wealthy, and they can afford to buy it beyond their own borders.

Sharing the most precious resource in the Middle East

By Ali Z. Ghazawi

WATER security will be one of the most important items to be tackled two weeks after the projected Madrid peace talks, on Nov. 13. The scarcity of water in the Middle East has been a constant source of friction between the various countries in the region. Water flowing from the rivers that originate in non-Arab countries accounts for 65 per cent of the region's water supply.

Thomas Stauffer, an international water consultant, wrote for the Arab Research Centre symposium on water, held in Amman in 1984, that it would cost Israel about $1.2 to $1.8 billion per year to supply its population with the necessary water requirements by employing large-scale sea water desalination plants to replace the water it takes from the occupied territories, which costs $2 billion annually.

Two-thirds of Israel's water resources is secured within its 1948 borders while the remaining one-third is pumped from the West Bank. Of the West Bank's 615 million cubic metres (MCM), more than 80 per cent is consumed by 120,000 Jewish settlers and the remaining is used by 1.2 million Palestinians. Jewish settlers' per capita consumption ranges between 640 to 1,480 cubic metres per year. In contrast, Palestinian per capita consumption ranges between 107 to 156 cubic metres per year.

According to the Jobstoo Plan, three countries — Jordan, Syria and Israel — have to share the Jordan River water. However, Israel diverted the Jordan River's water at Lake Tiberias through its national water carrier to central Israel and the Negev Desert.

Another common water source between the three countries is the Yarmouk River. The Yarmouk River water flow has been reduced to less than 385 MCM annually and distributed between Jordan, Syria and Israel, each taking 35 per cent, 39 per cent and 26 per cent respectively. Jordan is transferring its share from Yarmouk River to the Jordan Valley, which provides the Kingdom with more than 40 per cent of its agricultural produce, through the King Abdullah canal or irrigation purposes.

Water is a precious commodity in the Middle East because of the arid climate of the region. One of the main Israeli reason in occupying South Lebanon was to control the Litani River, which originates in the Bekaa Valley. A wide-range scheme to transfer water to underground pipes from the Litani River to Israel has been under implementation for some time now.

Furthermore, Israeli water engineers have been conducting water surveys in Ethiopia and Uganda in order to divert part of the Nile water by building several dams before it reaches Egypt. It is worth mentioning that Israeli policymakers have been eager to divert part of the Nile to irrigate the Negev Desert. Such scheme would provide Israel with sufficient water resources to settle and inhabit the desert.

Within this context one wonders what are the most effective methods to deal with the water security issue during the upcoming peace parley. Here is an attempt to put forward a few suggestions which could be of some help:

— First, emphasis should be placed on sharing the technology in water discovery and uses within the region. This can be accomplished on bilateral basis with financial and technical assistance from the United States, the European Community and Japan.

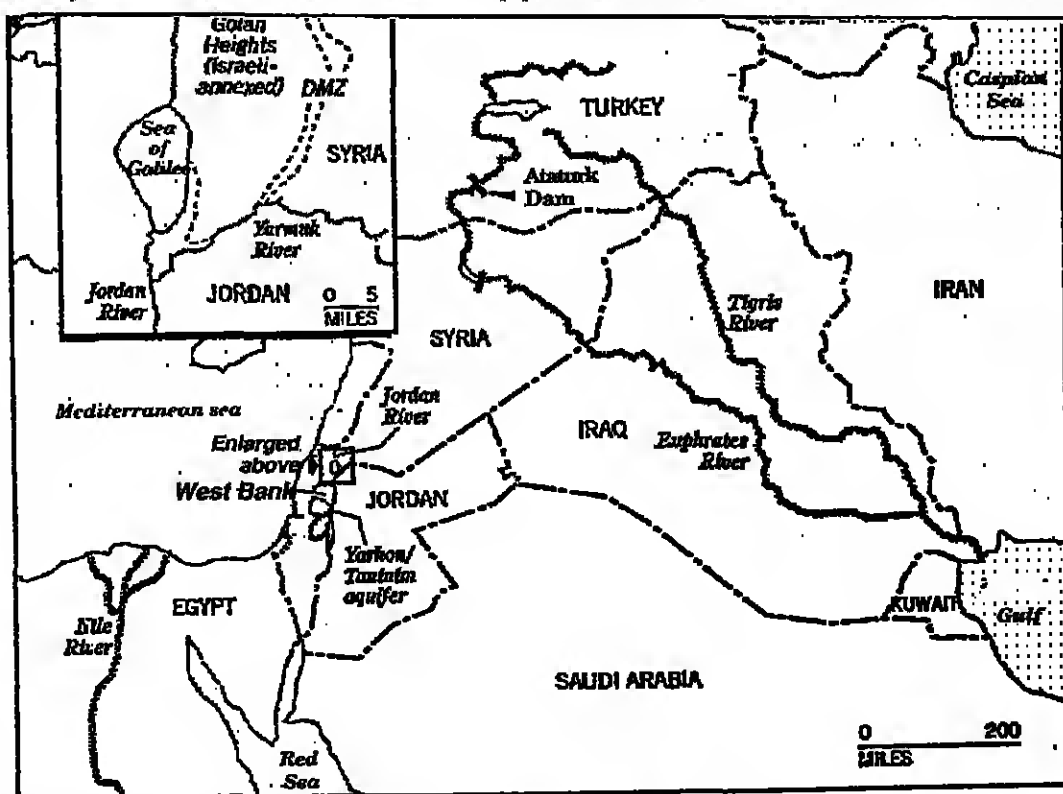

— Second, a joint large-scale sea water desalination plant should be built as an incentive for a peaceful settlement. The Gulf Cooperation Council states can supply fuel free or at reduced prices to run such a plant.

— Third, since most of the Middle East countries suffer from acute water shortages, an agreement on crop patterns should be — Fifth, a regional water bank should be established, where the Middle East states can collect and save water during the rainy season to use in times of shortage.

— Fourth, all parties should stop subsidising water prices in order to eliminate excessive water usage.

The Cuomo presidential game — will he run?

By Arthur Spiegelman
Reuter

NEW YORK — If Hamlet were alive today he would be Mario Cuomo, the Democratic governor of New York state, and the question would be "to run or not to run."

Mr. Cuomo, considered by many to be the most articulate and charismatic figure in a depressed Democratic Party, is making front-page news these days by simply stating he is thinking of running for his party's U.S. presidential nomination.

Six other Democrats have already declared by Mr. Cuomo makes news by saying he is thinking of doing what they have already done and the reason is simple — no other Democrat looks as strong as he does on paper in the fight to defeat President George Bush in the 1992 election.

No other Democrat has kept the public and the political guessing longer than Mr. Cuomo. The "will he or won't he" question is now in its seventh year.

Political experts say that if the Democrats are to win the White House in 1992, they will have to find a candidate who can articulate the mood of pessimism that seems to be sweeping a country worried about its economy, faltering schools, worsening crime and a flawed health care system.

"Bush can be beaten in 1992, Cuomo might make a lousy president but he can be a very good candidate because he can speak," says retired New York Times political columnist James Reston, who has covered 10 presidents. Mr. Cuomo declined to run in 1988 and Democrats got stuck with another governor — Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts — who was soundly defeated, partly because he lacked the rhetorical firepower Mr. Cuomo packs. Mr. Dukakis could not articulate the issues, counter Mr. Bush's attacks or talk with passion, even when asked what he would do if someone raped and murdered his wife.

Ten days ago Mr. Cuomo had a dozen New York reporters and television cameras waiting for him to finish addressing a group of high school students in Manhattan because he had told an earlier meeting of financial backers that he would think about making the run.

Then, for 45 minutes, in a dozen different ways, Mr. Cuomo explained that his thinking about the presidency — which he says he does all the time — did not mean a change in his position that he had no plans to run.

But in Chicago on Sunday, Mr. Cuomo took matters further, saying he had until "sometime in November" to make a decision. He says his problem is "I'm the governor of New York. How do you manage that and a presidential campaign?"

It was a problem another New York governor, Franklin Roosevelt, handled well in his successful 1932 presidential campaign.

On Tuesday the New York Post reported that Mr. Cuomo's son, Andrew, a key political adviser, had for the first time urged his father to run. Quoting two unnamed sources close to the governor, the Post said Andrew had made a detailed analysis of what his father would have to do to win the presidency.

Mr. Andrew Cuomo declined to say what advice, if any, he had given his father.

Bob Neuman, a Democratic strategist and former official of the Democratic National Committee, said he expects Mr. Cuomo to jump into the race and that Mr. Cuomo's leading supporters in California are telling major fundraisers there to hold off siding with any other Democrat until the governor decides.

"He's got an obvious leg-up on the others. He'll be formidable, but I don't think anyone can sit back and just let it happen," Mr. Neuman said.

"He has to work for it. And he knows that. He's a good enough politician to know that it would be arrogant to assume the nomination will automatically come his way."

Masri meets Palestinian delegations.

Reporters were kept away from the hall where the meetings took place. Later the spokesman of the Palestinian negotiating team, Dr. Hanan Ashrawi, said that Mr. Masri met with representatives from inside and outside the occupied territories. She gave no details but described the meeting "as productive and informative."

Arafat to stay out of peace talks

real peace, but we have to work now for it... we may succeed to achieve real peace in this area," he said.

The interview for the current events programme "Fozzer and Daghue" was broadcast live to some parts of the United States. Mr. Arafat said Thursday he was prepared to discuss a ceasefire with Israel to help along moves towards Middle East peace.

But the PLO leader, whose organisation is barred from attending the historic peace conference in Madrid next week, said Israel will have to talk to him first.

"We are ready to examine positively any official offer (from Israel) with view to mutual arrangements between the two parties in order to facilitate a peaceful outcome," Mr. Arafat told a news conference in Tunis Thursday.

He was responding to a question from Yuzi Mahammi, Middle East editor of the Tel Aviv daily Yedioth Aharonoth, who asked whether the PLO would consider goodwill gestures such as a ceasefire to help the peace process.

"Let them ask me the question officially, first of all, and I will reply, I am president of the State of Palestine and not of a charitable association," Mr. Arafat replied.

"So far they (Israeli leaders) have said no to the PLO," Mr. Arafat left open the question of whether any ceasefire would include a halt to the intifada in the occupied territories, which is now nearing the end of its fourth year. "The cause of the intifada is the (Israeli) occupation," he said.

He suggested that a ceasefire would involve a halt to armed attacks on Israel from outside and inside the occupied territories, a halt to new Jewish settlements in the territories and the release of prisoners.

Israel puts the number of Palestinians in its military jails at more than 8,500.

Mr. Arafat also said that as part of any peace accord the PLO would favour deployment of multinational forces inside a future Palestinian state along its border with Israel "for as long as the Israeli people think it necessary to ensure their security."

"It would also be a security for us the Palestinians," he added.

Mr. Arafat said that in the long term the two sides should establish normal relations, including free movement of people.

"We discussed strategies and brought each other up-to-date," she said.

The basis of the joint Jordanian-Palestinian negotiating strategy has already been worked out by His Majesty King Hussein and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat while technical teams from both sides are currently formulating working papers on the various aspects of negotiations.

PLO officials said that the agreement with Jordan stressed that the joint delegation at the conference will seek a solution based on Israeli withdrawal from all of the occupied territories and the right of self-determination for the Palestinian people.

They said that the agreement specified that the establishment of a Jordanian-Palestinian confederation will come after the Palestinians are able to exercise their right to self-determination.

Although the exact wording of the agreement was not made public, it is aimed at overcoming U.S. and Israeli opposition to the establishment of an independent Palestinian state in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Jordan and the PLO have also agreed that they will press for an immediate halt to Israeli settlements in the occupied territories prior to the start of the bilateral talks and that progress should be made on the Palestinian issue before proceeding to the multilateral talks.

The positions of both Jordan and the PLO were given a big boost on Thursday when a meeting of ministers of foreign states in Damascus declared the Arab side will seek an immediate halt to the Israeli settlements and a complete Israeli withdrawal from all of the occupied Arab territories, including Jerusalem.

The Damascus meeting, which had the blessing of both Gulf states and the Arab Maghreb Union, apparently aimed at countering declared Israeli intentions to secure its acceptance in the Arab World without making a territorial compromise.

There were no strong indications, however, that the Damascus declaration amounted to a full-fledged commitment by all parties or an agreement that the Arab side will demand the postponement of the date of the multilateral talks.

The multilateral talks are supposed to start two weeks after the opening of the conference.

A senior PLO official, who attended the Damascus meeting, said Friday that practical steps were still needed to ensure a unified Arab position.

"We all want to see real progress concerning the issues of Israeli withdrawal and the settlements so that we can seriously discuss regional security and economic arrangements," said PLO Executive Committee member Yasser Abed Rabbo.

"But to practically implement these objectives we will continue the coordination prior to the peace conference," Mr. Abed Rabbo said.

The Damascus meeting involved the beginning of a reconciliation process involving both Jordan and the PLO with Saudi Arabia. Jordan's Foreign Minister Kamel Abu Jaber and Mr. Qaddoumi met separately and informally with Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al Faisal for the first time since the Gulf war.

Arab sources close to the meeting told the Jordan Times that Prince Saud stressed Saudi Arabia's political support for the Jordanian-Palestinian negotiating position, but there were no commitment for the resumption of Saudi financial aid to either Jordan or the PLO.

Jordanian sources said Dr. Abu Jaber was happy with both the results of the Arab meeting and his exchange with the Saudi minister. "The latter helped to clear the atmosphere between the two countries following the strain of the Gulf crisis," one source said. "It is a step forward, and we are hoping for more of the same," the source added.

Jordan finalises its delegates

The highest authority on the negotiations by the joint Jordanian-Palestinian committee will be the consultative body under the joint command of King Hussein and Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) Chairman Yasser Arafat.

Technical committees, comprising senior government officials who have had decades of experience with problems and issues spawning from the Arab-Israeli conflict, are working on finalising the details of presenting the Jordanian case in Madrid and enabling the actual negotiating team to get down to business in bilateral talks with Israel.

Dr. Majali, who has served as minister of health and education as well as a special advisor to the King in the past, will assume charge of the bilateral negotiations after the opening session of the conference.

"Dr. Abu Jaber will head the team to the ceremonies at Madrid but Dr. Majali will remain with the negotiating team when talks break into bilateral negotiations," a source told the Jordan Times.

The naming of a "technical team" to the peace conference came after speculations that a "national team" comprising political heavyweights of Jordan was being planned, but sources explained that the need for a national team was not eliminated under the present arrangements.

"The team of negotiators does not have the jurisdiction to make national decisions but has to come back to the consultative body and the cabinet on every step they make," said one of the sources.

"Therefore there is no need for a national team at the negotiating table because the final decision will be made here in Amman," the senior government source said.

"They have to be specialists in their field to conduct specialised negotiations on the issues which will be proposed during the course of talks," the source added.

Sources also rejected speculations that Jordan would upgrade the level of its representatives to the peace conference to balance it with the high-profile Israeli delegation, which will be led by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir.

The two teams within the delegation are expected to conduct several coordination meetings during the next two days before leaving to Madrid Monday.

The joint delegation is also expected to meet with King Hussein for final consultations before the conference.

Resignation to end differences

Mafraq, was unavailable for comment Friday, but in comments to the international press, he asserted that his resignation was also related to his discontentment over the composition of the Jordanian-Palestinian delegation to the peace talks.

"I have a certain position which differs from that of the government," Mr. Dughmi was quoted as saying by the Associated Press. "I am not against the peace conference, but I am against the form of participation," added the deputy, a member of the eight-member Democratic bloc in the Lower House.

He was also quoted as saying that he disagreed with the government's economic policy, including its decision to dispose of the government's shares in the private sector.

"There may be dozens of reasons behind Mr. Dughmi's resignation, but the main among them is differences with other cabinet members, including the prime minister himself," said the cabinet source. "It is a long story of uneasy working relationship in the council of ministers."

According to sources close to the cabinet members and others, the proverbial straw came over conflicting stands adopted by Mr. Masri and Mr. Dughmi over the contentious issue of government involvement in the administration of private enterprises, which are majority owned by the government.

The sources said Mr. Masri and Mr. Dughmi recently clashed over whether the government should use its influence in the appointment of a director general of one enterprise which is majority owned by the Social Security Corporation (SSC), whose chairman is by law the labour minister, in this case Mr. Dughmi himself.

Controversy still surrounds the argument between the prime minister and Mr. Dughmi, since neither was available for comment and no independent confirmation of what had actually happened could be obtained by the Jordan Times.

The debacle might have served as the straw that broke the council's back in Mr. Dughmi's term as minister, but the build-up to it has been in the making for some time although little has been said about it in the media.

The business community, mostly industrialists, had been disenchanted with Mr. Dughmi's policy of summary replacements of foreign workers by Jordanians as one of the key solutions to addressing the mounting unemployment in the kingdom.

The industrialists had argued that they were suffering from dramatic decline in productivity and efficiency as a result of sudden departures of key foreign workers and had appealed to the prime minister for a gradual process of replacing those workers rather than blanket refusal to renew work permits for them.

and causing sudden disruptions in production.

On the human level, employers of foreign labour had argued, many of the foreign workers who came under the Labour Ministry are had been in Jordan for many years and filled in a key slot in the Jordanian economy left vacant by the Kingdom's skilled personnel who opted for more lucrative jobs in the Gulf states.

"If Jordan can argue that it was unfair for Kuwait to summarily dismiss Jordanians and Palestinians who had been there for decades, then the same argument can also be applied in the case of foreign workers in Jordan," noted one of them. "Besides no labour minister can ignore the distinction between skilled members of any workforce, such as university professors, and manual labourers and put them in the same category when issuing work permits to them," he added. "The human aspect also weakens our case and argument for retaining our expatriates abroad."

At the same time, proponents of the "Jordanisation" of the labour work argue that the process should start with weeding out "dispensable foreign elements" employed in Jordan, "which is what Mr. Dughmi has been trying to do."

"But singling out foreigners and replacing them with Jordanians is not the answer," commented a prominent businessman.

"The Ministry of Labour, along with all other concerned government departments, should work towards creating more job opportunities rather than focusing on skilled foreign workers who have contributed a lot to Jordan's economy over the years."

On a different level, Mr. Dughmi was known to have been publicly pursuing means to secure funds for the Development and Employment Fund, although, at least technically, it was the ministries of planning and finance as well as the Industrial Development Bank which were directly involved in the fund, which was proposed and partially financed by the World Bank.

The fund, which is slowly taking shape after securing commitments from the European Community and other external sources, will seek to finance self-support projects initiated by skilled Jordanians.

Economists argue, however, that the fund, one of the self-admitted centre-pieces of Mr. Dughmi's approach to reducing unemployment, could not have addressed the unemployment problem by any significant measure of success since the target amount is $16 million while recent figures released by the Planning Ministry indicates that the Kingdom needs at least $2 billion to create enough jobs to absorb the unemployed in the Kingdom.

52 drivers take part in speed test

Komok wins season's final event

By Aileen Bannayan
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Ahmad Komok in a Renault 5 Turbo won Friday's speed test organized by the Royal Automobile Club of Jordan (RACJ).

Komok, who was 14th in the overall Jordanian standings prior to the speed test won with a time of 2 minutes and 17.23 seconds. Ma'rouf Abu Samra in another Renault 5 Turbo came in second with a time of 2 minutes 19.57 seconds. He was followed by Ghaith Bilbeisi in a Toyota Starlet 1350 CC with a time of 2 minutes 19.68 seconds.

The speed test, held at the RACJ, began at 10 a.m. with 52 drivers taking part and a large number of auto sports enthusiasts cheering their favorites. The results were decided on the basis of the fastest times recorded by each competitor in the two attempts of the morning and afternoon sessions.

Friday's speed test was highly competitive as it concluded the 1990-91 Jordanian Championship, season and the speed test's results might well affect the overall standings of the drivers.

Competitors in the speed test ranged from experienced drivers to newcomers to the sport. Each had different aspirations and ideas about the competition.

Ma'rouf Abu Samra, who won last month's speed test was very apprehensive of the results.

"We're now competing not just for winning the speed test but for the overall standings in the Drivers Open Championship of Jordan," Abu Samra told the Jordan Times.

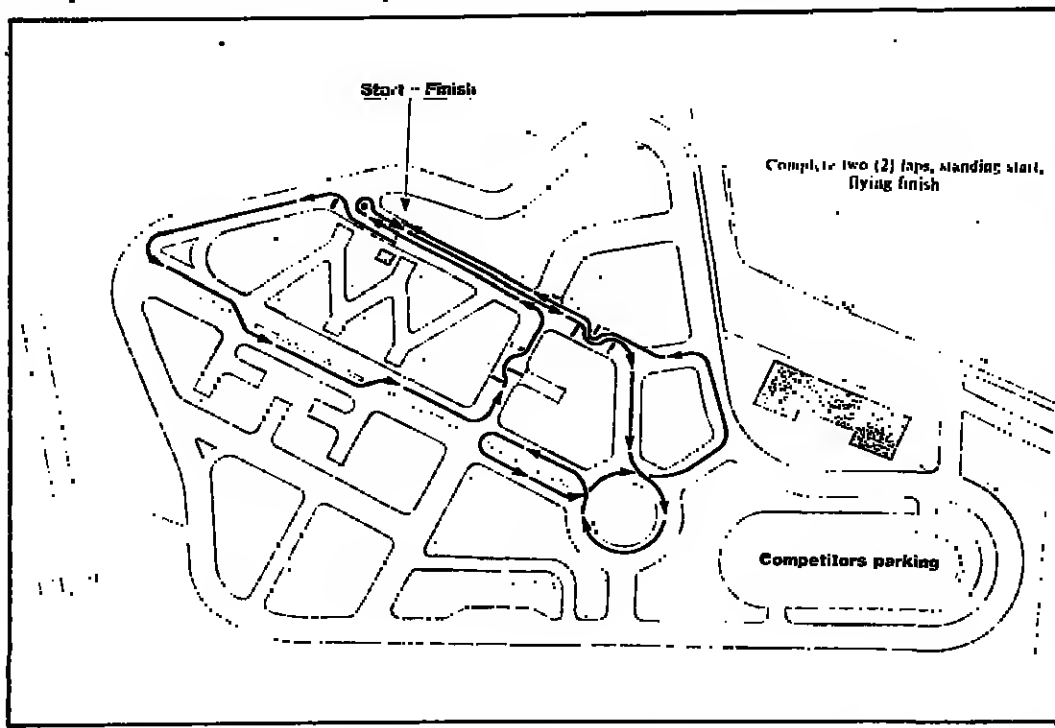

Mohammad Al Matkari, 12th in the overall standings, who also took part in the speed test in his Datsun 180B, said: "It is a very enjoyable sport and pastime although we face many problems due to lack of sponsorship."

First time competitor, Mohsen Al Jabali commented: "It's a bit scary at first, but I would like to be able to compete with the more experienced drivers."

Commenting on the safety rules and organization of the speed test, Hassan Al Taba'a who is fourth in the overall standings said: "The organizers have done their utmost to ensure that spectators and participants abide by the safety rules. This speed test is much better organized than the last one."

Prior to Friday's speed test, Naser Bustani was leading the Drivers Open Championship with 165 points followed by Ma'rouf Abu Samra in second place with 162 points and Ghaith Bilbeisi third with 143.5 points.

In the Autotests Open Championship of Jordan Ghaith Bilbeisi leads with 50 points. Sinan Saudi is second with 44 points, while Ahmad Komok is third with 38 points.

Four Americans reach quarterfinals in Stockholm

STOCKHOLM (AP) — Pete Sampras has joined fellow Americans Richey Reneberg, Jim Courier and Aaron Krickstein in the quarterfinals of the Stockholm Open.

It was the best U.S. showing in the $1.1 million tournament since 1981, when five Americans made the final eight.

Sampras, last year's U.S. Open champion and seeded No. 7, overcame David Engel of Sweden 6-7 (1-7), 6-2, 6-4 to set up a meeting with defending champion Boris Becker.

"I still feel I'm playing good tennis, but not great. I'm not at the same level as Lyon," said Sampras, who captured his third ATP title of the year in France last week.

Becker, who beat Sampras in straight sets in the semis here last year, advanced with a 7-6 (3-3), 6-1 victory over Goran Pijepic, a Croat who refuses to play for Yugoslavia.

"I played much easier today," said Becker, the world's second-ranked player. "Tomorrow will be a good test for me to see where I stand."

"I haven't played many top players in the last couple of weeks," Becker suffered a back injury during the U.S. Open and didn't make his comeback until two weeks ago in Tokyo, where he was beaten by American Derrick Rostagno in the quarters.

Engel, ranked 165th in the world before the tournament, saved four set points in his last two service games and then took the opening set by winning the tiebreak 7-1 before a partisan crowd of 12,915 at the Globe Arena.

Sampras, serving and returning well, jumped to a 4-0 lead in the second set and coasted the rest of the way. He broke the Swede's serve for 5-4 in the decisive set and then held to wrap up the match.

"He served so well in the last two sets," Engel said. "There was nothing I could do. The serve is his best weapon."

Earlier, top-seeded Stefan Edberg extended his match-winning streak to 19, two short of his personal record, with an easy 6-2, 6-3 win over Brad Gilbert of the U.S.

Edberg won successive ATP titles in Sydney and Tokyo, where he also beat Gilbert in straight sets, after capturing first U.S. Open title early September. The Swede's personal record is 21 straight matches. That streak ended with a first-round loss at the U.S. Open last year.

"It's a long way to improve the record. I need to win here and the three last matches are always the toughest in a tournament," said Edberg, whose streak is the longest of the year.

Edberg's next opponent is Reneberg, who beat No. 9 seed Karel Novacek of Czechoslovakia 2-6, 6-3, 6-3.

"He's played very well in the last couple of weeks so it's going to be a difficult match," said Edberg of the unseeded Reneberg, who is ranked 39th in the world.

Pete Korda fought back from a set down to beat No. 5 seed Ivan Lendl 5-7, 6-1, 6-4 and will meet French Open champion Jim Courier in the quarterfinals.

Courier, the third seed, beat Rostagno 7-5, 6-1.

"It's a dream come true. I was his ballboy a few times back home during a youth tournament," said Korda after the center-court match between the two native Czechoslovaks.

The remaining quarterfinal will pit Krickstein against hard-serving Croat Goran Ivanisevic.

Krickstein, who upset Wimbledon champion and No. 4 seed Michael Stich to three sets Wednesday, defeated No. 14 seed Jakob Hlasek of Switzerland 6-2, 3-6, 6-2.

Ivanisevic, seeded 12th, edged No. 6 guy forget of France 7-6, 7-6. The first tiebreak, which ended 15-13, was the longest on the circuit this year. Ivanisevic won the second tiebreaker 7-5.

Korda, a left-hander who reached a career-high 13th on the ATP computer by winning a recent tournament in Berlin, used a serve-and-volley game to beat Lendl, the 1989 Stockholm Open champion.

"The (supreme court) surface is really quick, so it gave me a chance to play an aggressive game," Korda, 23, broke the top 50 in the rankings in July and has been climbing ever since.

Switching of a new coach, former Czech pro Vladimir Zednik, early this year helped Korda to improve his game. He also has a new attitude.

"We've worked real hard, but not only on my game," Korda said. "He has changed me mentally, to be more happy in my life and enjoy my tennis and make people happy. Unfortunately, Vladimir can't be with me this week because he is sick."

Holyfield to fight Damiani in Atlanta next month

NEW YORK (R) — With the eagerly anticipated showdown against Mike Tyson on hold due to the former champion's injured ribs, undisputed heavyweight boxing champion Evander Holyfield will fight Italian Francesco Damiani next month, his promoter announced Thursday.

Holyfield will defend his crown in his hometown of Atlanta, Georgia, against the former European heavyweight champion on Nov. 23, said Main Events chief Dan Duva, who promotes Holyfield's fights.

The fight will take place at the Omni, where Holyfield won his first world title in 1986 — the World Boxing Association junior heavyweight crown.

Holyfield had been set to defend against Tyson on Nov. 8 in Las Vegas in a bout that was expected to earn an estimated $100 million. But Tyson reported pulled cartilage on his ribs last week and his doctor said he could not even spar for six to eight weeks.

Intense negotiations earlier this week aimed at rescheduling the fight failed to produce a date agreeable to both fighters' camps.

Tyson promoter Don King had hoped to hold the fight before Jan. 27, when Tyson is scheduled to go on trial on charges that he raped a beauty pageant contestant last July in his hotel room in Indianapolis, Indiana.

But Main Events spokeswoman Kathy Dava said Wednesday that Holyfield did not want to wait that long to fight again.

"He doesn't want to waste the training he already has put in," she said.

Opening lead: Five of ♣. Before playing to the first trick, plan your campaign — whether you're declaring or defending. South ignored this sage advice and paid a terrible price.

In response to partner's takeout double, South's jump to two no trump was classic — no four-card major, 11 points in a balanced hand and a double stopper in the enemy suit. Since North had a rather better than minimum double at any vulnerability, the raise to three no trump was automatic.

That would win, and declarer can then start on diamonds. If West wins and continues hearts, South's Q-10 constitutes two additional stoppers in the suit and the defenders are limited to their three aces. Any shift would permit declarer to then force out the ace of spades, and North-South gamered 10 tricks. The ups to win an extra trick proved expensive indeed.

Braves bomb Twins to take 3-2 World Series lead

ATLANTA (R) — The Atlanta Braves dispensed with suspense on Thursday and instead delivered an awesome 14-5 mauling of the Minnesota Twins to complete a home sweep that turned the World Series upside down.

After winning consecutive one-run, nail-biting victories the last two nights, the Braves pounded Minnesota with a double-fisted attack that included three home runs, three triples and a pair of doubles among 17 hits.

The offensive explosion put Atlanta within one victory of winning the series despite losing the first two games in Minnesota.

The lopsided result sent the crowd of 50,878 at Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium into rapture and enough tomahawk-chopping to cause and epidemic of sore elbows.

"This is the best home park in baseball, what with the chop that has really caught on all over," said Atlanta centerfielder Ron Gant, who had three hits, including a triple. "They really supported us this season and it does something for the attitude of our ballclub."

The Braves, however, have played their last game at home as the best-of-seven shifts to the Metrodome on Saturday where the Twins have never lost a World Series game.

"Since it was the last game in Atlanta we felt like we owed them something," Gant said. "All the guys on our team wanted to thank them."

Atlanta took 12 innings and more than four hours of win on Tuesday, and needed ninth-inning heroics on Wednesday to even the series.

Game 5 was played by an entirely different script as the Braves scored four runs in the fourth, six in the seventh and three in the eighth besides a solo run in the fifth for the biggest series total since the New York Yankees posted 16 runs in 1960.

Among the hitting stars were David Justice, who had a two-run homer and drove in five runs, Lonnie Smith, who homered for the third successive game, and the remarkable Mark Lemke, who continued his unlikely series heroics with two triples and three runs batted in.

Atlanta starting pitcher Tom Glavine earned the win and Twins starter Kevin Tapani was tagged with the defeat in a reversal of the verdict rendered in Game 2 in Minneapolis.

When the teams reconvene within the noisy confines of the indoor Metrodome, Minnesota is expected to send 20-game winner Scott Erickson against preseason lefthander Steve Avery in a do-or-die game for the Twins.

"For us to come out and score like we scored tonight and with the fan excitement here, I mean it's just been a wonderful season," Justice continued. "We'd like to go to Minnesota and bring home that world championship for us and especially for our fans who supported us all year."

Minnesota manager Tom Kelly, ironically, had juggled his lineup in hopes of generating more runs, but the manoeuvring made no difference as Atlanta set the tone with a fourth-inning outburst.

Two of the biggest hits in the uprising glanced off the gloves of Twins fielders, but both would have required spectacular catches.

Ron Gant started the rally with a fine single to left. Justice drove the next pitch toward the wall in left.

The ball was hit so hard outfielder Dan Gladden did not have time to set himself at the wall before leaping. He tipped the ball with end of his mitt and the ball bounded off the top of the fence and out of the park for a two-run homer.

After a walk and an out, mild-mannered Mark Lemke again transformed himself into a series slogger and tipped a long drive toward the wall in right.

This time it was Davis who reached up on the dead run but had the ball tick off his glove and carom off the wall for a two-scoring triple. Lemke then came around on a sharp double to left by shortstop Rafael Belliard.

After adding another run in the fifth, Atlanta looked invulnerable behind Glavine.

But the lefthander, who had walked just 69 batters in 246 innings this season, lost his control in the sixth and was charged with three runs in the inning despite giving up just one hit. Glavine walked four batters, the last three in succession, to force in two of the runs.

Reliever Kent Mercker put out the fire and the Braves buried the Twins with a six-run seventh started by a long blast to left by Smith.

It was the third homer put out the fire and the Braves buried the Twins with a six-run seventh started by a long blast to left by Smith.

He became the first player to homer in three successive World Series games since "Mr. October" — Reggie Jackson — accomplished the feat for the New York Yankees in 1977.

"I'm just happy, I can't describe it," said Smith, 35. "The home runs don't mean as much to me as the fact that we're ahead now."

Manchester United worried by omens and history

LONDON (R) — Leaders Manchester United, undefeated in the English league this season, hope history does not repeat itself at Sheffield Wednesday Saturday.

United, who lost to Atletico Madrid in their European Cup Winners' Cup second-round first-leg game in midweek, travel to Hillsborough hoping to stretch their 12-match unbeaten league run.

But match number 13 may prove unfortunat.

In 1985, under manager Ron Atkinson, United were top of the division with a 15-match unbeaten run when they went to Wednesday. They lost 1-0 to Lee Chapman goal and finished the season fourth, 12 points behind champions Liverpool.

Wednesday were fighting for promotion from the second division last season but they still managed to embarrass United, beating them 1-0 at Wembley in the League Cup final.

Veteran Northern Ireland defender Nigel Worthington believes his team mates could well pull off another upset.

Worthington, the longest-serving player at Wednesday, missed the 1985 game through injury but hopes to make amends. "This is one of those games you look forward to," he said.

Welsh striker Mark Hughes, starting a three-match ban, will be one of three United players absent. Defender Paul Ince hurt his ankle and Mark Phelan his back in Madrid.

To add to United's problems Mark Robins, a possible deputy for Hughes, also starts a two-match ban.

If United remain unbeaten, they are still a long way off the record for an unbeaten start to the season of 29 games set by Leeds in 1973-74 and Liverpool in 1987-88.

Second-Placed Leeds, with Chapman back from injury, are just two points behind United and play at Oldham. If they win and United lose, Leeds will take over at the top.

Liverpool, with only one win in their last eight games, have injury problems for their home match against Coventry.

Steve Nicol has a hamstring strain, Gary Ablett is suspended and eight other first team players are injured.

Manager Graeme Souness has signed Motherwell's ally Maxwell on loan for a month as reserve for Bruce Grobbelaar while fellow goalkeeper Mike Hooper recovers from a calf operation.

Coventry player-manager Terry Butcher, still upset after being sent off in a midweek cup tie, could be forced to include himself in the lineup for the match at Anfield.

The former England star had a knee operation after last year's World Cup and played seven first team games for Coventry after taking over last season. He had another operation in January, and has hardly played since then.

Jimmy Carter, Arsenal's recent signing from Liverpool, could get his Highbury debut against Notts County in place of Sweden's Andres Larsson.

Kevin Campbell, scorer in the 1-1 European Cup draw with Benfica Wednesday, could also drop out with expensive signing Ian Wright lurking in the wings as a replacement.

Changes in law were misunderstood; Jordan maintains liberal approach Minister clarifies foreign investment policy

By P.V. Vivekanand
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Contrary to common belief, the Lower House of Parliament has not discouraged foreign investment in the Kingdom and the door remains wide open for foreign investors to come in, according to Minister of Industry and Trade Ali Abul Ragheb.

The controversy, kindled by Lower House amendments to a draft law on foreign investments in Jordan, is much ado about nothing since the government has not changed its policy of encouraging foreign investors and simplifying related legal procedures, he said.

If anything, Mr. Abul Ragheb adds, the government has enhanced and improved the climate for foreign investment in the Kingdom and some of the regulations governing such enterprise are in fact more liberal than in some other Third World countries.

"Many potential investors have misunderstood the amendments to the law as voted by the Lower House" in early August, Mr. Abul Ragheb told the Jordan Times in a recent interview.

The very idea of introducing the draft law was to reduce bureaucracy and what the Lower House did was to incorporate elements which added to the legal procedures governing permissions for foreign investment in the country, he said.

"What we wanted was to eliminate the involvement of the council of ministers in approving projects with foreign investment," Mr. Abul Ragheb explained. "The amendment to article six of the law now states that the council of ministers have to approve such projects, thus retaining the status quo."

The original draft of the law said investment from "foreign" investors in projects in the areas of industry, tourism, health, agriculture, housing, mineral exploration, media, education, telecommunications and construction could be approved by the minister of industry and trade. The amendment deleted mineral exploration, media, education, and telecommunications from the areas where foreign investors could come and change the reference from "foreign" investors to "Arab" investors for projects that could be approved by the minister and stipulated that "non-Arab" investments should be cleared by the council of ministers.

The amendments do not prohibit "foreign" investments in these areas, Mr. Abul Ragheb pointed out. In essence, he said, a foreign investor could own 100 per cent of projects in these fields as long as they had approval from the council of ministers upon the recommendation of the minister of trade and industry.

Mr. Abul Ragheb referred to a recent agreement concluded between the Jordan Phosphate Mines Company (JPMC) and an Indian firm to set up a phosphoric acid plant in the south and said the JPMC will have only 40 per cent equity in the project while the Indian company will own 60 per cent.

Foreign investment in the fields of contracting and transportation — air, land and sea — is restricted to 49 per cent ownership but after approval by the council of ministers.

Mr. Abul Ragheb noted that these areas "represent the bread and butter of Jordanians" and supported the argument that foreign investments in these fields should not exceed 49 per cent.

Voted down by the House also were provisions allowing for foreign investors to set up small businesses and handicraft industries and for foreigners to participate in tenders and start projects as well as conduct technical studies if the investor transfers a minimum of JD 25,000 (or convertible equivalent in other currencies) to Jordan.

Other provisions in the law — left unchanged by the House — allow for foreign equipment, machinery and technical assistance as well as trade marks and patent rights to be brought into Jordan and considered as capital investment after their value has been determined by experts appointed by the minister of trade and industry.

The law liberalises foreign participation in dealings in the Amman stock market (as long as the volume of shares purchased by a foreign investor does not exceed 49 per cent of the total equity of the concerned company) and eases the way for repatriation of capital and profits.

The provisions allow profits derived by foreign investors from Jordanian projects to be reinvested and considered as capital.

The law also offers immunity to projects with foreign investment against seizures or confiscation except through a legal process conducted by a court of law.

The overriding stipulation in the law is that the foreign investor should transfer the funds in any convertible currency to Jordan through a licensed Jordanian financial institution. This provision is clearly aimed at blocking the flight of Jordanian capital disguised as foreign investment.

The amendments to the law came after razor-thin votes — in one case 29 in favour and 28 against — in the House after what was interpreted by observers as an oversight on the part of the ministers-cum-deputies to turn up for the session. Only 57 of the 80 members of the House attended the session, but Islamist deputies and their supporters turned up in strength to incorporate the amendments.

"Six deputies who are ministers were not present during the session," noted one observer. "If they were present, there was no way these amendments could have been incorporated since the margin of votes in favour did not exceed two."

The main contention of the Islamists was that the draft law, in its original form, would have allowed "hostile powers" to invest in Jordan and gradually gain control of key economic sectors in the Kingdom. But the net shape of the law after the amendments has only added to the bureaucracy in contrast to the government's objective of addressing complaints that too many legal procedures discourage potential investors, economists say.

Furthermore, analysts say, if the goal of Islamists was to block "hostile investment" in Jordan then they have not succeeded since the council of ministers still is empowered to allow foreign investments after scrutiny.

Observers point out that the amended law has not been fully endorsed by parliament since the Upper House (Senate) has not voted and approved it. "It is highly possible that the Senate would add its own amendments and send it back to the Lower House, prompting a new round of votes when the government could muster majority and reverse the original Lower House amendments," one observer pointed out.

Serbia rejects revised EC plan

THE HAGUE (R) — Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic Friday rejected a revised European Community (EC) plan for a loose association of independent Yugoslav republics.

"This proposal, with this content does not lead to stability and peace but opens the way for us to new instability and tension," he said in a speech released to journalists.

The European Community-sponsored peace talks on Yugoslavia reopened Friday, with presidents of the country's six republics attending, to discuss a plan for a loose association of independent republics.

Conference Chairman Lord Carrington said on British Radio the EC should keep trying to find a political solution to the conflict. The start of the meeting was delayed by an hour by talks between Mr. Milosevic and Lord Carrington.

The latest peace effort has been shaken by a boycott of the talks by the Serbian bloc of the collective Yugoslav Presidency and by continued fighting in the crumbling federation despite further EC ceasefire attempts.

Former British Foreign Secretary Carrington, asked about the peace process by British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC) radio, said Friday morning: "No. Of course I'm not confident. It would be foolish to be confident. But what I am sure of is that one has to go on trying, because if we fail the consequences for the people of Yugoslavia are going to be perfectly terrible in terms of human misery."

The EC is to present a fleshed-out version of a plan agreed by all the republics except Serbia at last week's session of the conference. It foresees a looser association for the six republics and two provinces, which group 23.5 million ethnically and religiously diverse people.

The new 11-page document circulated among journalists Friday sets out the same general terms, talking of "a free association" of sovereign and independent republics within the existing borders.

The draft calls for autonomy for certain national or ethnic groups where they form a majority within republics and adds that such areas must be permanently demilitarized.

Meanwhile, a Yugoslav army pilot defected in his fighter plane to neighbouring Austria Friday, Austrian Radio reported.

The pilot landed his Soviet-built MiG in the southern town of Klagenfurt shortly after 10 a.m. (0900 GMT). It was the first defection of a pilot with his aircraft in the war between the Serbian-led army and the break-away Republic of Croatia.

"I was informed by the security services at Klagenfurt that a Yugoslav army pilot had landed and was seeking political asylum," Interior Minister Franz Loeschner told the radio. "He is currently being questioned."

The Austrian News Agency (APA) said Austrian authorities identified the pilot as 33-year-old Rudolf P. His surname was withheld.

"I am a Croat and I don't want to fire on my own people," he was quoted by police as saying during questioning.

He told police his 50-minute defection flight began in Bihac, a strategic Yugoslav military base 100 kilometres south of the Croatian capital, in the neighbouring republic of Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The MiG-21 was not armed, and its two extra fuel tanks were empty, said Austrians who examined the aircraft.

The Yugoslav army launched a new mortar attack on the historic Adriatic port of Dubrovnik Friday, just hours before the start of peace talks with the European Community in the Hague, Croatian Radio said.

It said the army fired mortars on the eastern approaches to the city in the early hours of the morning despite a truce agreed with Croatian forces.

The radio gave no other details of the new attack on Dubrovnik but said that on Thursday shells fell on hotels and residential areas and landed near a hospital and in the city harbour.

It was not clear whether any historic buildings were hit. The advance on and bombardment of Dubrovnik prompted sharp Western criticism of the siege of an historic port deemed a world heritage site by the United Nations.

"The ceasefire was short-lived," said Simon Smith, head of a 200-strong European Community observer group in Yugoslavia, referring to a local truce supposed to have started at five p.m. (1600 GMT) Thursday.

In a new strain on the collapsing Yugoslav Federation, Serbs voted Thursday night to set up their own parliament in Bosnia-Herzegovina because the other main ethnic groups in the volatile republic have declared it a sovereign state.

Ukrainian parliament backs economic reforms

KIEV, Soviet Union (R) — The Ukrainian parliament changed its mind Friday and backed its government's plans for economic reform, including mass privatisation, after securing independence from Moscow.

One day after rejecting detailed government plans for a separate Ukrainian currency, central bank and customs, deputies voted 284 to 39 in favour of a two-paragraph resolution supporting the government's policy.

The parliament put off until next week a debate on proposals to close down the Chernobyl nuclear power station.

The economic policy resolution authorised minister of the second most important Soviet republic to implement "the privatisation of property, the liberalisation of prices, financial and agrarian reform and the social needs of the population."

"A lot of talking clearly went on last night and people appear to have calmed down," said Viktor Lisitsky, a Ukrainian member of the federal Soviet parliament.

"The government has been talking about privatisation for a month without achieving anything. The idea now is to get on with the business of setting up an economy after independence without fighting over specific plans," he added.

Radical deputies said Thursday the plan was not drafted properly and called for the resignation of Prime Minister Vitold Fokin.

Parliament's turbulent session came in the middle of a referendum campaign in which voters on Dec. 1 are likely to back the Ukraine's independence from Moscow.

National sentiment reached fever pitch after the failed hard-line coup against Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev in August and now even conservative deputies favour independence.

Local journalists said Mr. Fokin's removal could have delayed moves towards independence and this forced radicals to rethink their position and back the government.

On Chernobyl, deputies were expected to vote for complete closure of the station, site in 1986 of the world's worst nuclear accident, as soon as technically possible.

Deputy Vladimir Yavorivsky, an ecologist who has led the campaign for its closure, told deputies they would be fully informed of the consequences in the coming winter of removing the station from the Soviet power grid.

There was no indication whether deputies would debate the question of whether the Ukraine would adhere to an economic agreement binding together Soviet republics and the Kremlin following the collapse of the country's main institutions in August.

More looting in Zaire as West pressures Mobutu

KINSHASA (R) — Looting continued in Zaire's second city early Friday as Western pressure mounted on President Mobutu Sese Seko to make peace with the opposition.

Belgium told thousands of its nationals who have stayed in Zaire despite violent riots and looting to leave the former Belgian colony at once to avoid putting their lives in danger.

Diplomatic sources said soldiers and civilians were methodically pillaging houses in Lubumbashi, the capital of South East Shaba province.

At least 17 people were killed in the city this week after army-led looting began Monday, the medical aid charity Medecins Sans Frontieres (MSF) said Thursday.

"There is a breakdown of authority in Lubumbashi. Looters are going methodically from one abandoned house to another," a Western diplomat said.

Most of the 1,400 remaining expatriates in Lubumbashi, the centre of Zaire's crucial mining industry, are being evacuated by Belgian paratroopers.

A convoy of foreigners would leave Friday by road to Zambia, diplomats said.

Belgian Prime Minister Wilfried Martens said in a statement Friday: "In the light of the latest developments in Zaire the government finds itself obliged to insist forcefully that all Belgians leave the country so as not to put their lives and security at risk."

"This evacuation should happen at once so that it can benefit from the final protection of Belgian soldiers in Zaire," the statement said.

Some 4,500 Belgians are still in Zaire. Before riots and pillaging plunged the country into chaos a month ago about 10,000 live there. Both the United States and Western European countries piled pressure on Mr. Mobutu to pull back from the precipice and compromise with the main opposition parties backed by ordinary Zaireans.

The French Foreign Ministry said Friday that the remaining French nationals in Zaire are to be evacuated and immediately afterwards France will withdraw the troops it sent to keep the peace.

"Given the situation in Zaire, the French embassy in Kinshasa has been told to organise, in coordination with the Belgian authorities, all the necessary means to repatriate the whole of the French community in Zaire as soon as possible," said Ministry spokesman Daniel Bernard.

"The French troops will be withdrawn as soon as the departure of French nationals has been guaranteed... our cooperation (with Zaire) has been broken off," he added.

The capital was calm Friday morning, 24 hours after violent riots erupted in protest at Mr. Mobutu's choice of prime minister.

He picked veteran campaigner Mongi Diaka as Zaire's fourth premier in 1991, defying Western and domestic pressure to reappoint opposition leader Etienne Tshisekedi.

In its toughest statement since the crisis erupted in Zaire last month with army-led riots, the United States effectively rejected Mr. Mongi as a credible premier.

"An effective and credible government in Zaire is an immediate necessity... such a government must be formed and led by a prime minister having broad popular support," the State Department said Thursday.

Soviet Turkmenia set to declare independence

MOSCOW (R) — The conservative Soviet Central Asian Republic of Turkmenia is set this weekend to declare independence, making it one of the last republics to do so since August's failed hardline coup.

A popular referendum on whether the mainly desert republic should secede from Moscow is set for Saturday and most of the 3.6 million population are likely to vote yes.

Leaders in the republic, which relies heavily on its cotton crop, are set formally to declare independence Sunday.

Republican officials say the move towards secession from Moscow was sparked by the coup, after which all the republics except Turkmenia, Russia and Kazakhstan declared independence.

"Our population favoured maintaining the union, and is still for the preservation of a single economic space," said Anatoly Sokolov, deputy head of the Turkmenian mission in Moscow. "The referendum was caused by a change in inter-republican relations. After the coup, central control collapsed. Ours was one of the last republics to decide on declaring independence," he said in an interview.

"Almost all the others have done it and we had to come to our own conclusion," he said.

A joint statement by President Saparmurad Niyozov and the Turkmenian parliament published last week said the republic could not be diverted from the path to independence and would create its own armed formations to defend its territory.

In a national referendum in March, over 95 per cent of Turkmenians voted to maintain the Soviet Union. The republic was one of the eight which last week signed a key economic agreement to prevent total economic collapse this winter.

Turkmenia has always been one of the most conservative republics, where local leaders have traditionally kept a tight grip on power and clamped on opposition movements.

U.K. Labour takes 6 point lead in poll

LONDON (AP) — The opposition Labour Party moved into a six-point lead over the Conservatives in an opinion poll released Thursday, another in a series of surveys showing a decline in support for the ruling party.

The National Opinion Polls (NOP) survey for the Independent newspaper and the Broadcasting Corp. (BBC) also showed that nearly twice as many people trust Labour to protect the National Health Service (NHS).

Labour's gain came largely at the expense of the Liberal Democrats, according to the poll.

The Tory rating at 39 per cent was unchanged a similar NOP poll conducted last month, which gave Labour a 3 per cent lead.

NOP said that Labour received the support of 45 per cent of those polled, up from 42 per cent a month ago; the Conservatives held on to 39 per cent; the Liberal Democrats had 12 per cent, a two-point drop; others had 4 per cent, a loss of one.

It was the second poll in a week to show an advantage for Labour. A Harris poll for the Observer newspaper conducted last week put Labour seven points ahead of the Conservatives.

The polls are being watched because Prime Minister John Ma-joor must call an election by July 1992.

NOP also found that only 30 per cent of voters share the government's view that "the NHS provides a better service today than it did 10 years ago."

Asked which party they trusted more to take the right decisions about the National Health Service, 55 per cent said Labour while 28 per cent replied Conservative, NOP said.

NOP interviewed 1,545 people Saturday, Sunday and Monday, a week after the end of the Tory Party conference and following renewed debate about the NHS. The margin of error was 3.5 per cent.

Regional strongman willing to take on Russia

GROZNY, USSR (AP) — Retired General Dzhokhar Dudayev has spent his career being bold — but his past exploits would pale in the face of what he's considering doing if he becomes president of the Chechen-Ingush Autonomous Republic.

The 46-year-old former bomber pilot is the best-known of four candidates for president in Sunday's elections. If he wins, he says, he would consider having his small enclave wage war against the gargantuan Russian Republic.

"I believe there is a realistic threat of war," he said in his office, which was bustling with aides in blue suits and camouflage gear. "I have no illusion that Russia will release its colonies."

Gen. Dudayev took control of the Chechen-Ingush Republic, a part of southern Russia, on Sept. 6 when his supporters occupied government buildings and ousted the Communist government for purportedly supporting the failed August coup.

His attempts to create a sovereign Chechen nation prompted Russian President Boris Yeltsin last Saturday to issue a three-day deadline for Gen. Dudayev to relinquish seized government buildings and disarm his National Guard and raucous gun-waving army of young volunteers. The deadline passed without incident.

Athens polytechnic ablaze after violent clashes

ATHENS (R) — The centre of Athens looked like a war zone Friday, with the city's polytechnic on fire and shops smashed and looted after the worst clashes in years between students and police.

Twenty people were injured in all-night skirmishes between police and students demanding more spending on education.

Witnesses said 500 riot police fired thousands of rounds of tear gas and fought hundreds of protesters who occupied the polytechnic building, hurled petrol bombs, threw rocks, and blocked streets with burning barricades and a bus.

The sky lit up in much of Athens as a fire raged for five hours in the polytechnic before it was brought under control. The neo-classical building was badly damaged and officials said the blaze was deliberately set by some 100 anarchists inside. The school's dean asked police to clear the building.

Forty-nine people were arrested. "We are afraid this is not the end. Many anarchists left the building during the night but they may come back and create more problems," a senior police officer said.

The clashes started Thursday after a march by some 1,500 students to the Education Ministry to demand more spending on education and the abolition of mid-term examinations reintroduced this year.

Police said that at the end of the demonstration the anarchists buried stones and other objects at the ministry building and then went on to occupy the polytechnic.

The students have occupied more than 100 schools for the past two weeks and have threatened to take over all 1,600 high schools in Greece if the government does not meet their demands.

Student protests in January resulted in the resignation of Education Minister Vassilis Konstantopoulos when a teacher was killed during a similar march.

"The damage in the polytechnic is tremendous. The fire totally destroyed one building which was built 150 years ago and priceless books, paintings and furniture. Today is a day of mourning for Greek academic society," said Nikos Markatos, dean of the polytechnic.

Seoul officials warn pact with North is not easy

SEOUL (R) — South Korean Prime Minister Chung Won-Shik returned from North Korea Friday with a "breakthrough" agreement to discuss a non-aggression pact, but officials warned that a final accord may be hard to achieve.

They also reiterated Seoul's demand that the North submit its nuclear programme to international inspection, a demand Pyongyang has denounced as "a brazen and provocative act."

Smiling broadly in the crisp Korean autumn, Chung crossed the world's most heavily fortified frontier at the Panmunjom truce village to end a four-day visit to the North Korean capital Pyongyang. Chung and his northern counterpart, Yon Hyong-Muk, agreed on working-level talks to draft an accord on reconciliation and non-aggression aimed at easing four decades of hostility on the Korean peninsula.

The two prime ministers also agreed to meet again in Seoul from Dec. 10 to 13, by which time a draft agreement could be ready for their consideration.

The agreement, the first progress in four rounds of talks between the two Koreas at premier level, was hailed by South Korean officials as a "breakthrough" for inter-Korean relations.

ANC, other groups discuss united front

CAPE TOWN (AP) — Black leaders urged a meeting of more than 70 anti-apartheid groups Friday to set aside their differences and form a united front to face the government in talks on political reform. Hundreds of delegates applauded as Walter Sisulu, deputy president of the African National Congress, and Clarence Mawewe, president of the Pan Africanist Congress, opened the Patriotic Front Conference. The meeting is aimed at uniting the widely disparate groups into a single force before negotiations begin with the government on a constitution ending white-minority rule. The government and ANC want those negotiations to begin this year.

White House agrees on rights bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — President George Bush has agreed to accept a modified version of the Senate's long-disputed civil rights bill, his Chief of Staff John Sununu said. The leading Republican sponsor, Sen. John Danforth, said the latest revision also had been accepted by the top Democratic supporter of civil rights legislation, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy. Senate Democrats scheduled a private caucus Friday morning to consider the latest Republican offer. It emerged from a long day of private negotiations, first among Senate Republicans and White House officials, and later including Sen. Kennedy. "We were finally able to get language accepted that eliminated the prospects of quotas. That's a very significant change," Mr. Sununu said. "I spoke with the president. It appears the proposal is acceptable and if there are no additional changes to what is there, the president is willing to sign that bill," he said.

Senate votes to probe Thomas leak

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate has voted 86-12 for a four-month special counsel's investigation into the leaks of sexual harassment allegations against Clarence Thomas. Thomas was approved by the Senate and sworn in Wednesday as a Supreme Court associate justice, but only after an extraordinary public hearing that thrashed out the charges in front of a spellbound national television audience. The resolution was sponsored by Democratic members and passed over Republican objections. It will include leaks that mostly harmed Democrats during the ethics committee's investigation into allegations that five senators — four Democrats and one Republican — improperly intervened with federal regulators on behalf of Charles Keating. He headed a failed savings and loan association. Mr. Bush earlier blasted Congress as a "privileged class of rulers" who shatter public confidence in government by holding themselves above the laws they pass for others.

Imelda getting her shoes back — all 1,700 pairs

MANILA (AP) — The government of President Corason Aquino has decided to return Imelda Marcos's world-famous shoe collection, a major attraction of the Malacanang Presidential Palace Museum. Presidential executive secretary Franklin Drilon said Thursday that Mrs. Marcos' 1,700 pairs of shoes and other "personal effects" such as perfume and underwear will be given back to her when she returns from exile next month. "We will give back all her personal effects," Mr. Drilon said. "Even if she doesn't claim them, we will give them back to her." Press Undersecretary Horacio Fardes earlier said Mrs. Marcos had to first prove she owned them. The shoes, including a pair with blinding disco lights, plus a bullet-proof bra and a basement full of gowns, are the main attractions of a tour of Malacanang. The palace was abandoned by the late President Ferdinand Marcos and his family when he was toppled in a popular revolt.

Taiwan criminals using pigeons to collect ransom

TAIPEI (R) — Car thieves in Taiwan have found an ingenious way to evade police while collecting ransoms from owners for the return of their vehicles — homing pigeons. They leave a ransom note and a pigeon, promising to return the car if the bird is dispatched with cash in a can tied to its body, police said Wednesday. "Once we tried to catch the thieves by using telescopes to follow the pigeon. But it flew too high and too fast and we lost sight of it," Chen Chiao-Ching, head of the central city of Changwu's Criminal Affairs Department, said by telephone. Breeding pigeons is a popular pastime in Taiwan, where the birds are kept as pets and flown in races.

Woman gives birth to 4th set of triplets

YAOUNDE (R) — A woman in the central African country of Cameroon has given birth to her fourth set of triplets, the official daily Cameroon Tribune said Tuesday. It said 30-year-old Falmata Abba, from the poor northern town of Yagoua, had borne 14 children in all including one pair of twins since she was married at the age of 10. One child died but the rest were all well, the paper added.

Tibet plans highest, coldest beauty pageant

HONG KONG (E) — Goosimples and vertigo will be just some of the hazards facing contestants when the Himalayan region of Tibet holds its first beauty pageant this winter. Perhaps the highest and coldest of its kind in the world, the beauty contest has the go-ahead from the Chinese authorities and will be held in Lhasa on Dec. 7, Ernesto Barba, Italian manager of the Holiday Inn Hotel that will host the event, said Wednesday. "It will be a big extravaganza," said Mr. Barba, speaking by telephone from Lhasa, the regional capital. Several attempts by Chinese cities, including Shanghai, to boost their profile by holding beauty contests have foundered in recent years because of political ill winds blowing from Communist hardliners. Tibet has its own special problems, rocked in the past few years by pro-independence demonstrations and the brutal suppression by police. Foreign tourism has begun to revive only this year after 14 months of martial law was lifted in May 1990.

Indonesians may enter beauty shows

JAKARTA (R) — Indonesian women will be allowed to enter international beauty contests again after a 20-year-old ban and may even wear bikinis if they stay in a swimming pool. News papers in the country with the world's largest Muslim population front-paged on Wednesday President Suharto's wife Tien meeting members of the Beauty Queen Foundation to discuss a representative for the 1993 Miss Universe pageant. Foundation head Dewi Mofit said it would erase the image of Indonesian women being seen only as mental workers. An overseas only will be sent to the Miss Universe contest in Bangkok, in 1992.
